

- 2.74 Using the planning information
- 2.75 Aims and objectives
- 2.76 Techniques
- 2.77 How the interview is to be recorded
- 2.82 Interviewers and others present at the interview
 - 2.82 The interviewer
 - 2.87 The interview monitor
 - 2.89 Equipment operators
 - 2.90 Interpreters
 - 2.96 Intermediaries
 - 2.102 Interview supporters
- 2.106 Location of the interview
- 2.110 Timing of the interview
- 2.113 Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)
- 2.118 Planning for immediately after the interview
- 2.121 Child witnesses who might become suspects
- 2.123 Recording the planning process
- 2.124 Victim Personal Statements

Part 2B: Interviewing child witnesses

Aims

- 2.130 General principles
- 2.133 Preliminaries
- 2.136 Phase one: establishing rapport (including engaging and explaining)
 - 2.136 Explaining the formalities
 - 2.137 Building rapport
 - 2.142 Ground rules
 - 2.143 Truth and lies
 - 2.144 Explaining the outline of the interview
 - 2.145 Establishing the purpose of the interview
- 2.147 Phase two: initiating and supporting a free narrative account
- 2.153 Phase three: questioning
 - 2.153 Prior to the questioning phase of the interview
 - 2.154 Style of questions
 - 2.156 Content of questions
 - 2.160 Open-ended questions
 - 2.164 Specific-closed questions
 - 2.170 Forced-choice questions
 - 2.171 Leading questions
 - 2.175 Topic selection
 - 2.177 Misleading statements
- 2.179 Phase four: closing the interview
- 2.183 Evaluation
 - 2.184 Evaluation of the information obtained
 - 2.185 Evaluation of interviewer performance
- 2.186 Post-interview documentation and storage of recordings
- 2.188 Further interviews
- 2.189 Identification procedures
- 2.190 Therapeutic help for the child
- 2.192 The cognitive interview (CI)
- 2.196 Special interviewing techniques
 - 2.196 Props
 - 2.198 Other interviewing techniques
- 2.202 Interviewing children with disabilities
 - 2.202 Planning and preparation
 - 2.211 The interview
 - 2.211 Phase one: rapport
 - 2.216 Phase two: free narrative account
 - 2.219 Phase three: questioning
 - 2.222 Phase four: closing the interview
- 2.223 Interviewing very young or psychologically disturbed children
- 2.226 The child who becomes a suspect

3 Planning and conducting interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses

Part 3A: Planning and preparing for interviews

Aims

- 3.1 Who are vulnerable adult witnesses?
- 3.2 Recognising vulnerable adult witnesses
- 3.4 Significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)
- 3.7 Behavioural indications of learning disability
- 3.10 Physical disability
- 3.12 Mental disorder
- 3.17 Initial contact with vulnerable adult witnesses
- 3.19 Support for vulnerable adult witnesses
- 3.19 Witnesses with a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)
- 3.26 Witnesses with a physical disability
- 3.33 Witnesses with a mental disorder
- 3.42 Consent
- 3.51 Competence
- 3.54 Planning and preparing for the interview
- 3.60 Planning information
- 3.61 Information about the witness
- 3.62 Race, gender, culture and ethnic background
- 3.67 Other life experiences
- 3.69 Witnesses with a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)
- 3.76 Witnesses with a physical disability
- 3.77 Witnesses with a mental disorder
- 3.80 Information about the alleged offence(s)
- 3.82 Information important to the investigation
- 3.84 Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice
- 3.85 Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material
- 3.87 Significant evidential inconsistencies
- 3.90 Significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information)
- 3.92 Using the planning information
- 3.93 Aims and objectives
- 3.94 Techniques
- 3.95 How the interview is to be recorded
- 3.98 Interviewers and others present at the interview
- 3.98 The interviewer
- 3.105 The interview monitor
- 3.107 Equipment operators
- 3.108 Interpreters
- 3.115 Intermediaries
- 3.121 Interview supporters
- 3.126 Location of the interview
- 3.129 Timing of the interview
- 3.132 Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)
- 3.134 Planning for immediately after the interview
- 3.135 Witnesses who might become suspects
- 3.137 Recording the planning process
- 3.138 Preparing the witness for an interview
- 3.145 Sharing information with carers
- 3.146 Victim Personal Statements

Part 3B: Interviewing vulnerable adult witnesses

Aims

- 3.151 General advice on interviewing vulnerable adult witnesses
- 3.157 Interviewer behaviour
- 3.161 Pace and breaks
 - 3.161 Pace
 - 3.162 Breaks
- 3.163 Phase one: establishing rapport (including engaging and explaining)
 - 3.163 Explaining the formalities
 - 3.164 Building rapport
- 3.171 Ground rules
- 3.175 Oaths and the importance of telling the truth
- 3.178 Phase two: initiating and supporting a free narrative account
 - 3.184 Compliance
 - 3.190 Acquiescence
- 3.194 Phase three: questioning
 - 3.194 Prior to the questioning phase of the interview
 - 3.195 General approach
 - 3.206 Open-ended questions
 - 3.212 Specific-closed questions
 - 3.217 Forced-choice questions
 - 3.220 Leading questions
 - 3.228 Understanding what the witness is trying to convey
 - 3.230 Topic selection
 - 3.232 Misleading statements
- 3.236 Phase four: closing the interview
 - 3.237 Closure
- 3.244 Evaluation
 - 3.245 Evaluation of the information obtained
 - 3.246 Evaluation of interviewer performance
- 3.247 Post-interview documentation and storage of recordings
- 3.249 Further interviews
- 3.251 Identification procedures
- 3.252 Therapeutic help for vulnerable adult witnesses
- 3.253 The cognitive interview (CI)
- 3.257 Special interviewing techniques
- 3.260 Other interview techniques
- 3.263 Witnesses who become suspects during the interview

4 Planning and conducting interviews with intimidated witnesses, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses, including ‘reluctant’ and ‘hostile’ witnesses

Part 4A: Planning and preparing for interviews

Aims

- 4.1 Who are intimidated witnesses?
- 4.3 Who are Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses?
- 4.7 Who are significant witnesses?
 - 4.11 Who are reluctant witnesses?
 - 4.15 Who are hostile witnesses?
- 4.16 Initial contact with intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses
- 4.18 Support for intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses prior to the interview
- 4.24 Consent
- 4.27 Planning and preparing for the interview
 - 4.29 Planning information
 - 4.31 Information about the witness
 - 4.32 Race and cultural factors
 - 4.37 Information about the alleged offence(s)
 - 4.39 Information important to the investigation

- 4.41 Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice
- 4.42 Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material
- 4.44 Significant evidential inconsistencies
- 4.47 Significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information)
- 4.49 Use of planning information
- 4.50 Aims and objectives
- 4.51 Techniques
- 4.52 How the interview is to be recorded
- 4.57 Interviewers and others present at the interview
- 4.57 The interviewer
- 4.63 The interview monitor
- 4.65 Equipment operators
- 4.66 Interpreters
- 4.72 Interview supporters
- 4.77 Location of the interview
- 4.80 Timing of the interview
- 4.83 Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)
- 4.86 Planning for immediately after the interview
- 4.87 Witnesses who might become suspects
- 4.89 Recording the planning process
- 4.90 Preparing the witness for an interview
- 4.97 Victim Personal Statements

Part 4B: Interviewing intimidated witnesses, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses, including 'reluctant' and 'hostile' witnesses

Aims

- 4.101 General advice on interviewing intimidated witnesses, Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses
- 4.107 Phase one: establishing rapport (including engaging and explaining)
- 4.107 Opening the interview: explaining the formalities
- 4.108 Opening the interview: personalising the interview, building rapport and engaging the interviewee
- 4.108 Personalising the interview
- 4.113 Building rapport and engaging the interviewee
- 4.121 Opening the interview: explaining the ground rules
- 4.122 Interview factors
- 4.125 Focused retrieval
- 4.126 Transfer of control
- 4.129 Report everything
- 4.131 Phase two: initiating and supporting a free narrative account
- 4.136 Context effects, memory and the mental reinstatement of context
- 4.136 Context effects and memory
- 4.141 The mental reinstatement of context
- 4.144 Active listening and appropriate non-verbal behaviour
- 4.145 Proxemics
- 4.146 Posture and orientation
- 4.147 The principle of synchrony
- 4.148 Pauses and interruptions
- 4.150 Phase three: questioning
- 4.152 Prior to the questioning phase of the interview
- 4.153 Types of question
- 4.154 Open-ended questions
- 4.156 Specific-closed questions
- 4.162 Wording of specific-closed questions
- 4.166 Forced-choice questions
- 4.168 Multiple questions
- 4.170 Leading questions
- 4.175 Asking questions
- 4.175 Topic selection

- 4.177 Witness-compatible questioning
- 4.178 Activating and probing images (mini-context reinstatement)
- 4.179 Extensive retrieval
- 4.180 Different senses
- 4.182 Recall in a variety of temporal orders
- 4.185 Change perspective technique
- 4.187 Memory prompts
- 4.189 Phase four: closing the interview
- 4.189 Recapitulation
- 4.193 Closure
- 4.199 Evaluation
- 4.200 Evaluation of the information obtained
- 4.201 Evaluation of interviewer performance
- 4.202 Post-interview documentation and storage of recordings
- 4.204 Supplementary interviews
- 4.205 Identification procedures
- 4.206 Therapeutic help for intimidated adult witnesses
- 4.207 Safeguarding intimidated witnesses
- 4.214 Witnesses who become suspects during the interview
- 4.219 Useful sources

5 Witness support and preparation

Aims

- 5.1 The benefits of preparation and support
- 5.12 Overview of support and preparation work
- 5.12 Who is entitled to support and preparation?
- 5.13 What does support and preparation consist of?
- 5.20 At the investigative interview
- 5.21 Pre-trial
- 5.23 While giving evidence
- 5.24 Evidential boundaries
- 5.27 Who can provide support?
- 5.30 What skills are involved?
- 5.31 Identifying and responding to the needs and wishes of witnesses
- 5.36 Preparation, support and liaison throughout the court process
- 5.37 Support during the investigation
- 5.39 Special requirements
- 5.41 Pre-trial support, preparation and liaison
- 5.42 Communication between the police and the CPS
- 5.45 Support before the trial/hearing
- 5.45 Plea and case management hearing (PCMH)
- 5.46 Preparation for going to court
- 5.48 A pre-trial visit to the court
- 5.50 Refreshing the memory of the witness
- 5.56 Communication with the witness
- 5.60 Provision of therapy prior to a criminal trial
- 5.62 Plans and communication concerning the trial
- 5.64 Role of the Witness Service
- 5.65 Role of the courts
- 5.67 Meeting the legal representative
- 5.68 Meeting the judge
- 5.69 Support at the hearing
- 5.70 Planning for breaks in the testimony
- 5.71 Interpreters and intermediaries
- 5.73 Special provisions for children
- 5.83 Special provisions for vulnerable and intimidated adult witnesses
- 5.83 Vulnerable adults
- 5.87 Intimidated adults
- 5.90 Afterwards – dealing with the outcome

6 Witnesses in court

Aims

- 6.1 Pre-trial planning
- 6.8 The court's responsibilities towards witnesses
- 6.13 The responsibilities of legal representatives towards witnesses
- 6.19 Competence and capacity to be sworn
- 6.25 Special Measures directions under the 1999 Act
 - 6.27 Witness eligibility (Sections 16 and 17)
 - 6.28 Vulnerable witnesses
 - 6.29 Intimidated witnesses
 - 6.38 Special provisions relating to young witnesses (Section 21)
 - 6.42 Witnesses over 17 (Sections 21 and 22)
 - 6.45 Special Measures directions (Sections 16 to 19)
 - 6.48 Binding directions (Section 20)
- 6.50 The Special Measures and other provisions
 - 6.50 Screening a witness from the accused (Section 23)
 - 6.53 Evidence by live link (Section 24)
 - 6.57 Choosing between live link and screens
 - 6.60 Evidence given in private (Section 25)
 - 6.63 Removal of wigs and gowns (Section 26)
 - 6.64 Video-recorded evidence-in-chief (Section 27)
 - 6.76 Video-recorded cross-examination or re-examination (Section 28)
 - 6.81 Choosing between video-recorded and live cross-examination
 - 6.83 Examination of a witness through an intermediary (Section 29)
- 6.91 Communication aids (Section 30)
- 6.92 The presence of a court witness supporter
- 6.93 The address of the witness
- 6.94 The use of a sign language interpreter
- 6.96 Protection of witnesses from cross-examination by the accused in person (Sections 34 to 38)
 - 6.97 Complainants in proceedings for sexual offences
 - 6.98 Complainants and other witnesses who are children
- 6.100 Other cases
- 6.102 Restrictions on evidence and questions about the complainant's sexual behaviour (Sections 41 to 43)
- 6.107 Applications to admit video-recorded evidence-in-chief under Section 137 CJA 2003

Appendices

- A Glossary
- B Admissibility of video-recordings under other provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 2003
- C The assessment framework
- D Conducting a video-recorded interview – the legal constraints
- E Identification parades involving vulnerable and/or intimidated witnesses
- F National Standards for Young Witness Preparation
- G National Standards for the Court Witness Supporter in the Live Link Room
- H Technical guidance
- J Storage, custody and destruction of video-recordings
- K Guidance on the completion of a Record of Video Interview (ROVI)
- L The use of transcripts of video-recorded interviews
- M Specimen form of receipt and undertaking for video-recorded evidence
- N Specimen information sheet: video-recorded interview
- P Warning label for video-recordings
- Q Useful sources

Foreword

The Government is committed to improving the protection for vulnerable and intimidated witnesses during the criminal justice process, especially children. As the Home Office document Rebalancing the Criminal Justice System in Favour of the Law-abiding Majority made clear, 'the needs of victims must continue to be at the heart of what the criminal justice system does. They must be treated properly throughout the system – with help, support, advice, and a chance for their voice to be heard.' Vulnerable and intimidated witnesses are in particular need of assistance to ensure that their voice is heard in court.

The first edition of this document was issued in January 2002 as part of Action for Justice, the implementation programme for the Speaking Up for Justice report. That report had led to the Special Measures in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, such as video-recorded interviews, which are aimed at ensuring that vulnerable and intimidated witnesses give their best-quality evidence to the court. The purpose of the guidance was to assist those conducting video-recorded interviews with such witnesses, as well as giving guidance to those tasked with preparing and supporting these witnesses during the criminal justice process.

A second edition has now become necessary in order to update the guidance as a result of developments of the past five years. These include reform of the law of evidence on bad character and hearsay in the Criminal Justice Act 2003; the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime, which came into force in April 2006 and places statutory obligations on criminal justice service providers; and the national roll-out by 2005 of the police/Crown Prosecution Service Witness Care Units, which aim to ensure that witnesses are better informed, better prepared and better supported throughout court proceedings. Additionally, the Intermediaries Special Measure has been the subject of a pilot in eight pathfinder areas. Finally, a new edition of this guidance allows the experiences of the many practitioners (without whom the best procedures would not succeed) to be taken into consideration, thus ensuring that our understanding – and the quality of this guidance – continues to improve.

Vera Baird QC MP
Solicitor General

Maria Eagle MP
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State
Ministry of Justice

Kevin Brennan MP
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State
Department for Children, Schools and Families

Edwina Hart MP
Minister for Health and Social Services
Welsh Assembly Government

Vernon Coaker MP
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State
Home Office

Ivan Lewis MP
Parliamentary Under Secretary of State
Department of Health

Acknowledgements

This guidance was originally drafted on behalf of the Home Office by a team of consultants consisting of: Professor Diane Birch (School of Law, Nottingham University); Professor Ray Bull (Department of Psychology, Portsmouth University); Pam Cooke (Ann Craft Trust; Nottingham University); Barbara Esam (Public Policy Department, NSPCC); Dr David Jones (Park Hospital for Children, Oxford); Joyce Plotnikoff (independent consultant); Professor John Spencer (Faculty of Law, Cambridge University); Dr Helen Westcott (Department of Psychology, The Open University), and led by Professor Graham Davies (School of Psychology, University of Leicester). Ruth Marchant and Marcus Page (Triangle Services, Brighton) drafted the guidance on interviewing disabled children and Laura Hoyano (Wadham College, Oxford University) developed Figures 6.1 and 6.2. Dr Lorraine Sheridan and Rosemary Chapman provided administrative support to the team.

2007 revision

The writing team consisted of Dr Becky Milne (Portsmouth University), Detective Chief Inspector Gary Shaw and Detective Sergeant Kevin Smith (National Centre of Policing Excellence). Contributions were also made by Detective Constables Steve Tilney and John Smith from the Metropolitan Police Service and Detective Chief Inspector Kerry Marlow of South Wales Police. In addition, comments and contributions were made by members of the Steering Group, Professors Ray Bull and Graham Davies (both from the University of Leicester), Joyce Plotnikoff (independent consultant), Andy Bennett from the Office for Criminal Justice Reform and Steve Wade from the Department for Constitutional Affairs.

The writing team would like to acknowledge the many individuals and organisations that contributed their time and expertise to the development of this guidance:

Steering Group Chair: Gillian Harrison (Better Trials Unit – Office for Criminal Justice Reform)

Revision Project Manager: Stephen Underwood (Better Trials Unit – Office for Criminal Justice Reform)

Mike Burns (Welsh Assembly); Kirsten Foster (Crown Prosecution Service); Jenny Gray (Department for Education and Skills); Daniel Mason (Local Government Association); Veronica Monks (Department of Health); Tivoli Wallington (Crown Prosecution Service); John Wright (Her Majesty's Courts Service); Superintendent Simon Deacy (National Police Project Manager – No Witness No Justice); Dr Kevin Smith (National Centre of Policing Excellence); Shirley Ford, Joanna Perry and Beverley Radcliffe (Victim Support); Geraldine Monaghan (Liverpool City Council); Brenda Robinson (no affiliation); Kathy Rowe (Hull Safeguarding Children Board); Barbara Esam (NSPCC); Gary Fitzgerald (Action Against Elder Abuse); Tink Palmer (Stop It Now!); Imelda Redmond (Carers UK); Rebecca Sedden and Robin Van den Hende (Respond); Janet Arkinstall (Law Society); John Dodd and John Riley (Criminal Bar Association).

Secretarial support: Gayle Fentiman (Better Trials Unit).

The writing team would also like to offer their heartfelt thanks to everybody at the Office for Criminal Justice Reform who helped with the redrafting.

Introduction

This guidance describes good practice in interviewing witnesses, including victims, in order to enable them to give their best evidence in criminal proceedings. It considers preparing and planning for interviews with witnesses, decisions about whether or not to conduct an interview, and decisions about whether the interview should be video-recorded or whether it would be more appropriate for a written statement to be taken following the interview. It covers the interviewing of witnesses both for the purposes of making a video-recorded statement and also for taking a written statement, their preparation for court and any subsequent court appearance. It applies to both prosecution and defence witnesses and is intended for all persons involved in relevant investigations, including the police, adults and children's social care workers, and members of the legal profession.

1. Status of the guidance

The first edition of this document (entitled Achieving Best Evidence in Criminal Proceedings: Guidance for Vulnerable and Intimidated Witnesses, Including Children (Home Office, 2002)) replaced the Memorandum of Good Practice on Video Recorded Interviews for Child Witnesses for Criminal Proceedings (Home Office, 1992). This second edition builds on and extends the guidance set out in the first edition to include other groups of witnesses (see 'The scope of the guidance' below) and fresh government initiatives that will improve the quality of service provided by the criminal justice system to victims and witnesses (notably the No Witness No Justice programme). The guidance provided in this document is advisory and does not constitute a legally enforceable code of conduct. The guidance is also generic; it cannot ever cater for every possible set of circumstances that might arise. Each witness is unique and the manner in which they are interviewed and subsequently prepared for their court appearance must be tailored to their particular needs and circumstances. However, interviewers and other practitioners should bear in mind that significant departures from the guidance provided in this document may have to be justified in the courts.

This introduction provides information on:

- > the origins of the guidance;
- > the witnesses to whom this guidance applies;
- > its role in training; and
- > the structure of the document.

2. The origins of the guidance

The Memorandum of Good Practice on Video Recorded Interviews for Child Witnesses for Criminal Proceedings was published to support the implementation of provisions in the Criminal Justice Act 1991 which permitted certain child witnesses to give their evidence-in-chief in the form of a video-recorded statement. Since then, video-recorded interviews conducted according to the Memorandum have become the preferred method of hearing children's evidence in criminal proceedings, particularly in cases involving allegations of sexual abuse. Video-recorded interviews conducted according to Memorandum guidelines have also frequently been used as evidence in civil proceedings involving the care and custody of children.

In order to take forward the Government's commitment to improve protection for vulnerable or intimidated witnesses, the Home Office in 1998 published Speaking Up for Justice, the report of an interdepartmental working group on the treatment of vulnerable or intimidated witnesses (including children) in the criminal justice system. The report recommended extending the existing Special Measures introduced for child witnesses (live closed circuit television links (CCTV) and video-recorded evidence-in-chief) to vulnerable or intimidated adults, together with a range of other measures from the investigation stage, through to the trial and beyond. Provisions to implement those recommendations requiring legislation were included in Part II of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999. These are subject to phased implementation and are not all available at the present time. An implementation table is attached to Ministry of Justice circular 25/06/07 Complaints in sexual offence cases in the Crown Court: implementation of Section 27 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 (for current availability please call 020 7035 8490).

A few months after the enactment of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, the Lord Chancellor, the Home Secretary and the Attorney General commissioned Sir Robin Auld to inquire into the practices, procedures and rules of evidence of the criminal courts in furtherance of the Government's overall aim of improving the criminal justice system. Sir Robin's report was the Review of the Criminal Courts of England and Wales (Lord Chancellor's Department, 2001). Recommendation 257 of the review suggested that consideration be given to extending the provision for video-recorded evidence to critical witnesses in cases of serious crime. This recommendation was subsequently reflected in the White Paper Justice for All (Home Office, 2002). Provision was then made for direct witnesses to indictable or prescribed triable either-way offences to make use of video-recorded evidence-in-chief in Section 137 of the Criminal Justice Act (CJA) 2003. This legislation effectively extends the guidance published by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) in respect of video-recorded interviews with significant witnesses (most recent version published in November 2002).

The broader inter-agency recommendations made in Justice for All were subsequently reported on by an inter-agency working group in No Witness No Justice (Home Office, May 2003). Crucially, the working group recommended that the commitment in Justice for All to put victims and witnesses at the heart of the criminal justice system be taken forward as a specific programme of work. It is this commitment that forms the basis of the No Witness No Justice programme.

The guidance set out in this document is intended to support the Government's commitment to improve the quality of treatment for victims and witnesses in the criminal justice system so that they have an opportunity to provide their best evidence. It takes account of the Code of Practice for Victims of Crime (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005), which was implemented in April 2006, and should be viewed in the context of other government policies in relation to improving the quality of service to victims and witnesses (see Appendix Q for a list of relevant publications).

3. The scope of the guidance

The guidance set out in this document covers:

- > vulnerable witnesses;
- > intimidated witnesses;
- > Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses;
- > significant witnesses;
- > reluctant witnesses;
- > hostile witnesses; and
- > defence witnesses.

It is accepted that individual witnesses could fall into more than one of the vulnerable, intimidated and Section 137 CJA 2003 categories. In these circumstances, there is no need to be concerned about the eventual designation of the witness at the point of interview provided that the guidance in Chapters 2 to 4 of this document is followed, because each chapter is based on the same general principles. The eventual designation of the witness into a particular category for the purposes of making an application to the court can wait until the case has been considered by lawyers after all the necessary enquiries are complete.

Vulnerable witnesses (Section 16, Youth Justice and Criminal Justice Act 1999)

'Vulnerable' witnesses are defined by Section 16 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 as:

- > all child witnesses (under 17); and
- > any witness whose quality of evidence is likely to be diminished because they:
 - suffer from a mental disorder (as defined by the Mental Health Act 1983); or
 - have a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (e.g. a learning disability); or
 - have a physical disability or are suffering from a physical disorder.

References to 'very young children' in this document mean children of nursery school age (i.e. up to 5 years of age), the term 'young children' refers to children of primary school age (i.e. up to 11 years of age) and 'older children' denotes those of secondary school age (i.e. over 11 years of age). The unqualified terms 'child', 'children' or 'young witnesses' refer generally to children of all ages up to the upper age limit defined in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 (i.e. below 17 years of age). This guidance applies to the broad range of children in these age groups and as such will not necessarily apply to an individual child witness. Interviewers and court officials should always take account of the level of cognitive, social and emotional development of the individual child when applying this general guidance.

Not all people with disabilities will necessarily be vulnerable as witnesses and would not wish to be treated as such. It is, therefore, important that the views of individual witnesses who might fall into this category are taken into account.

Further guidance intended to aid the identification of vulnerable witnesses, including some potential physical, behavioural, and social indicators of vulnerability, can be found in Vulnerable Witnesses: A Police Service Guide (ACPO and Home Office, 2002).

Intimidated witnesses (Section 17, Youth Justice and Criminal Justice Act 1999)

'Intimidated' witnesses are defined by Section 17 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 as those whose quality of testimony is likely to be diminished by reason of fear or distress at the prospect of giving evidence.

In determining whether a witness falls into this category, the court should take account of:

- > the nature and alleged circumstances of the offence;
- > the age of the witness;
- > where relevant:
 - the social and cultural background and ethnic origins of the witness; and
 - the domestic and employment circumstances of the witness; and
 - any religious beliefs or political opinions of the witness; and
- > any behaviour towards the witness by:
 - the accused;
 - members of the accused person's family or associates; and
 - any other person who is likely to be either an accused person or a witness in the proceedings.

Complainants in cases of sexual assault are defined as falling into this category per se by Section 17(4) of the Act. Vulnerable Witnesses: A Police Service Guide (ACPO and Home Office, 2002) suggests that victims of domestic violence, racially motivated crime and repeat victimisation and witnesses who self-neglect/self-harm or who are elderly and frail also fall into this category.

A number of prompts intended to aid the identification of intimidated witnesses can be found in Vulnerable Witnesses: A Police Service Guide (ACPO and Home Office, 2002).

Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses

Section 137 CJA witnesses are those who have or claim to have witnessed, visually or otherwise, an indictable or prescribed triable either-way offence, part of such an offence, or events closely connected with it (including any incriminating comments made by the suspected perpetrator either before or after the offence). Video-recordings of interviews with these witnesses can be admitted as evidence-in-chief if the witness's recollection of the events is likely to be significantly better at the time of the interview than at the time of giving evidence. Courts will take account of the length of the interval between the alleged event and the interview when considering this question.

Indictable offences are offences that are so serious that they can only be tried in a Crown Court. They include offences like murder, manslaughter, grievous bodily harm with intent, rape, kidnap, and death by dangerous driving. Prescribed triable either-way offences are offences that can be tried either in a Crown or a magistrates' court that have been specifically designated by the Home Secretary as coming within the scope of Section 137 CJA (no such offences were designated at the time that this document was revised).

Significant witnesses

Significant witnesses, sometimes referred to as 'key' witnesses, are those who:

- > have or claim to have witnessed, visually or otherwise, an indictable offence, part of such an offence or events closely connected with it (including any incriminating comments made by the suspected offender either before or after the offence) but who are unlikely to have video-recordings of their interviews admitted as evidence-in-chief under Section 137 CJA 2003 as a result of there having been a lengthy interval between the alleged event and the interview; or
- > stand in a particular relationship to the victim or have a central position in an investigation into an indictable offence.

In these circumstances, the purpose of the recording is primarily one of demonstrating the integrity of the interview process. There is no statutory provision for video-recordings of interviews with significant witnesses to be played as evidence-in-chief. The options for adducing the testimony on the recording as evidence are set out in paragraph 4.8 of this document.

Where significant witnesses are also vulnerable and/or intimidated, they should be treated as being vulnerable and/or intimidated rather than significant if their evidence is likely to be maximised by Special Measures.

Reluctant witnesses

Reluctant witnesses are individuals believed to have witnessed an offence, part of such an offence, or events closely connected with it who are reluctant to become involved in the investigative process. From time to time, investigators and others involved in the criminal justice system will encounter reluctant vulnerable, intimidated, Section 137 CJA, or significant witnesses. There could be a variety of reasons for this, including adverse perceptions of the police or criminal justice process based on experience or popular perception, fear of an alleged perpetrator, concern about the response of the community within which they live, worries about their identity being released or uncertainty about how they fit into the overall process. The initial actions taken in respect of such witnesses should, therefore, include trying to establish the source(s) of their reluctance, since it is only by doing this that an attempt to address the issue can be made.

Hostile witnesses

Hostile witnesses are individuals believed to have witnessed an offence, part of such an offence, or events closely connected with it who are openly hostile about the prospect of getting involved in the investigative process. During some investigations, investigators will encounter hostile vulnerable, intimidated, Section 137 CJA, or significant witnesses. The reasons for such hostility might include their lifestyle or they might have a close relationship with the alleged perpetrator and intend later to appear before the court as a defence witness. Some of these witnesses might simply refuse to co-operate, others might choose to provide false information intended to support the alleged perpetrator's account. Whatever the reason for the hostility and regardless of the extent of the co-operation, it is important that records are kept of all interactions with these witnesses. Where a hostile witness consents to an interview, it should be recorded in accordance with the guidance set out in this document: on video unless they object.

Defence witnesses

This guidance applies to defence as well as prosecution witnesses and the provisions contained in Part II of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 and Section 137 CJA 2003 are available to both groups if the court is satisfied that the witness meets the criteria.

4. The guidance and training

As was the case with the 1992 Memorandum, it is recommended that this guidance be used, in conjunction with other relevant guidance, as a key resource in the training of police and adult and children's social care social workers involved in the investigative interviewing of witnesses. The National Assembly for Wales published training resource material on behalf of the Government in April 2004 to assist in such training. It should also be used as a resource by those concerned with providing pre-trial support and preparation and those involved in the trial process. Training should also take account of the curriculum that has been developed in support of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004).

Specialist training should be developed to interview witnesses with particular needs. This should include interviewing young witnesses, traumatised witnesses and witnesses with a mental disorder, learning disability or physical disability impacting on communication. Such training should include working with intermediaries.

Specialist interview training should also be developed in respect of the use of the techniques in the cognitive interview (see paragraph 4.104).

It is important to note, however, that training alone is unlikely to deliver effective performance in the workplace. Training needs to be set in the context of a developmental assessment regime. Such a regime should deliver a means of quality assuring interviews, while developing, maintaining and enhancing the skills of interviewers. The regime should be supported by an agreed assessment protocol. In the case of police interviewers, such a protocol should take account of the National Occupational Standards for interviews with witnesses developed in Skills for Justice. Agencies regularly involved in conducting interviews with witnesses should have the necessary policies, procedures and management structures in place to quality assure interviews on an ongoing basis.

5. The content of the guidance

The guidance in this document is grouped into five major chapters:

Chapter 1 provides a general introduction to the 1999 legislation as it relates to interviewing, safeguarding and supporting witnesses. Sufficient background material is provided to give a general orientation to all those who must be familiar with the intentions and provisions of Part II of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 and Section 137 CJA 2003 but are not necessarily concerned with their practical implementation.

Chapter 2 gives advice and guidance on how to prepare for (Part A) and how to conduct (Part B) investigative interviews with children. It covers the legal knowledge necessary to carry out such interviews in a manner satisfactory to the courts, the requirements for the video-recording of such interviews, and advice on their conduct, including the style, variety and pace of questioning.

Chapter 3 contains advice and guidance on how to prepare for (Part A) and how to conduct (Part B) investigative interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses. Again, the legal position as regard these witnesses is outlined and advice given on how witnesses may be most effectively interviewed to obtain best evidence. Specific guidance is provided on interviewing witnesses with sensory impairments, learning disabilities and mental ill health.

Chapter 4 provides advice and guidance on how to prepare for (Part A) and how to conduct (Part B) investigative interviews with adult intimidated, Section 137 CJA and significant witnesses (including those who are reluctant or hostile). Specific guidance is provided on the use of the enhanced cognitive interview.

Chapter 5 describes how witnesses may be supported, safeguarded and prepared in the interval between a statement being made and a case coming to trial. Topics covered include the nature and type of support that may be offered, access to therapy and the Witness Service, and appropriate procedures to be followed once the outcome of a case is known.

Chapter 6 describes in detail the range of Special Measures available to vulnerable and/or intimidated witnesses, including children, at the discretion of the court. It also provides some guidance in respect of applications made under Section 137 CJA 2003. It describes good practice in the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, so as to enable them to give their best evidence.

General principles

Aims

By the end of this chapter, those involved with interviewing witnesses and preparing them for court should be able to understand:

- > the categories of vulnerable and intimidated witness covered by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 legislation (paragraphs 1.1 to 1.8);
- > the Special Measures and social support available to assist vulnerable and intimidated witnesses (paragraphs 1.9 to 1.19);
- > which witnesses might be eligible for video-recorded evidence-in-chief under Section 137 of the Criminal Justice Act (CJA) 2003 (paragraphs 1.20 to 1.23); and
- > which witnesses should have their interviews video-recorded by virtue of them being considered 'significant' (paragraphs 1.24 to 1.26).

Vulnerable witnesses

1.1 The principal areas that require attention if the needs of vulnerable witnesses, whether adults or children, are to be met are:

- > the recognition and subsequent reporting of crime;
- > the identification of vulnerabilities; and
- > putting effective measures to address these in place during investigation and pre-trial preparation, and during and after any criminal trial.

1.2 Vulnerable witnesses are defined by Section 16 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999. Children are defined as vulnerable by reason of their age. The Act acknowledges that all children under 17 years of age, appearing as defence or prosecution witnesses in criminal proceedings, are eligible for Special Measures to assist them in providing their evidence and having their evidence heard at court. Since their introduction in the Criminal Justice Acts of 1988 and 1991, the video-recording of interviews as a substitute for the child's live evidence-in-chief at court and the use of the live link facility to enable the child to give evidence from outside the courtroom have been extensively and successfully employed to enable the court to hear best evidence.

1.3 In addition to the witness who is under the age of 17 at the time of the hearing [Section 16(1)(a)(i)] (see Chapter 2), three other types of vulnerable witness are identified in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999. These are:

- > witnesses who have a mental disorder as detailed under the Mental Health Act 1983 [Section 16(2)(a)(i)] (mental disorder is defined in Section 1(2) of the Mental Health Act 1983);
- > witnesses significantly impaired in relation to intelligence and social functioning [Section 16(2)(a)(ii)] (learning disabled witnesses); and
- > physically disabled witnesses [Section 16(2)(b)].

1.4 Early identification of the individual abilities as well as disabilities of each vulnerable adult is important in order to guide subsequent planning. An exclusive emphasis upon disability ignores the strengths and positive abilities that a vulnerable individual possesses. Vulnerable witnesses may have had social experiences that could have implications for the investigation and any subsequent court proceedings. For example, if the vulnerable adult has spent a long time in an institutional environment, they may have learned to be compliant or acquiescent. However, such characteristics are not universal and can be ameliorated through appropriate preparation and the use of Special Measures.

Intimidated witnesses

1.5 As with vulnerable witnesses, the principal areas that require attention to meet the needs of intimidated witnesses are:

- > the recognition and subsequent reporting of crime;
- > the identification of the basis of the intimidation; and
- > putting effective measures to address these in place during investigation and pre-trial preparation, and during and after any criminal trial.

1.6 Intimidated witnesses are defined by the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 as those suffering from fear or distress in relation to testifying in the case [Section 17(1)].

1.7 Complainants in cases of sexual assault are defined as falling into this category by Section 17(4) of the Act. Vulnerable Witnesses: A Police Service Guide (ACPO and Home Office, 2002) suggests that victims of domestic violence, racially motivated crime and repeat victimisation and witnesses who self-neglect/self-harm or who are elderly and frail also fall into this category. The Code of Practice for Victims of Crime

(Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005) indicates that the families of homicide victims fall into this category.

1.8 Research suggests that sexual offences and assaults and those offences where the victim knew the offender are particularly likely to lead to the intimidation of witnesses. It seems likely that crimes which involve repeated victimisation, such as stalking and racial harassment, are also particularly likely to lead to intimidation. In addition, some witnesses to other crimes may be suffering from fear and distress and may require safeguarding and support in order to give their best evidence. While the legislation distinguishes between vulnerable and intimidated witnesses, in respect of the criteria for their eligibility for Special Measures it is important to recognise that:

- > some witnesses may be vulnerable as well as intimidated (e.g. an elderly victim of vandalism who has dementia on an inner-city estate);
- > others may be vulnerable but not subject to intimidation (e.g. a child who witnesses a robbery in the street); and
- > others again may not be vulnerable but may be subject to possible intimidation (e.g. a young woman who fears violence from her current or former partner or someone who has been the subject of a racial attack).

While these examples provide illustrations of the application of the legislation, it is important not to attempt to categorise witnesses too rigidly.

Special Measures

1.9 It has long been recognised that many people who are the victims of or witnesses to crimes experience the ensuing process of investigation and justice as stressful and fear-inducing, to such an extent that the interests of justice in preventing and detecting crime and the needs of witnesses are not adequately met. Certain classes of witness have particular difficulties, either because of age or personal circumstances, or because of their fear of intimidation, or because of their particular needs.

1.10 Stress affects the quantity and quality of communications with witnesses of all ages. The Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 introduced a range of measures that can be used to facilitate the gathering and giving of evidence by vulnerable and intimidated witnesses. It extended the provisions for using video-recorded evidence-in-chief and the use of the live link facility to adult vulnerable or intimidated witnesses and introduced a range of new provisions to facilitate the giving of best evidence. Video-recorded evidence-in-chief, live link and the other provisions contained in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 are collectively referred to as 'Special Measures'. These are all subject to the discretion of the court, although different presumptions apply to different categories of witness.

Box 1.1: Special Measures available to vulnerable and intimidated witnesses with the agreement of the court

- > Section 23: Screens may be made available to shield the witness from the defendant.
- > Section 24: The live link will enable the witness to give evidence during the trial from outside the court through a televised link to the courtroom. The witness may be accommodated either within the court building or in a suitable location outside the court.
- > Section 25: Evidence given in private. Exclusion from the court of members of the public and the press (except for one named person to represent the press) will be considered in cases involving sexual offences or intimidation.
- > Section 26: Removal of wigs and gowns by judges and barristers.
- > Section 27: A video-recorded interview with the vulnerable witness before the trial may be admitted by the court as the witness's evidence-in-chief. The court can, however, exclude a recording if there is insufficient information about where it was made, or if the recording contains serious violations of the rules of evidence.
- > Section 28: Video-recorded cross-examination is also to be considered admissible if the witness has already been permitted to give their evidence-in-chief on video prior to the court case. As with evidence-in-chief, the recording can be excluded if any rules have not been complied with.
- > Section 29: Examination of the witness through an intermediary, who may be appointed by the court to assist the witness to give their evidence at court. This measure is only available to vulnerable witnesses.
- > Section 30: Aids to communication will be permitted to enable the witness to give best evidence whether through a communicator or interpreter, or through a communication aid or technique, provided that the communication can be independently verified and understood by the court. Again, this measure is only available to vulnerable witnesses.

These Special Measures are briefly outlined in Box 1.1 above and are described in detail in Chapter 6.

1.11 It is important to note that the implementation of these Special Measures is a phased one. Some of these measures were still awaiting implementation at the time this edition of Achieving Best Evidence was written. The status of this phased implementation at any given time can be established by checking the most current Home Office circular relating to this matter, at:

www.knowledgenetwork.gov.uk/HO/circular.nsf/ViewTemplate%20For%20HOCircularsWeb?OpenForm

1.12 In addition to Special Measures, the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 also contains the following provisions intended to enable vulnerable or intimidated witnesses to give their best evidence:

- > Sections 34 and 35: Mandatory protection of witness from cross-examination by the accused in person. An exception has been created which prohibits the unrepresented defendant from cross-examining vulnerable child and adult victims in certain classes of cases involving sexual offences.
- > Section 36: Discretionary protection of witness from cross-examination by the accused in person. In other types of offence, the court has a discretion to prohibit an unrepresented defendant from cross-examining the victim in person.
- > Section 41: Restrictions on evidence and questions about complainant's sexual behaviour. The Act restricts the circumstances in which the defence can bring evidence about the sexual behaviour of a complainant in cases of rape and other sexual offences.
- > Sections 44 to 46: Reporting restrictions. The Act provides for restrictions on the reporting by the media of information likely to lead to the identification of children under 18 and certain adult witnesses in criminal proceedings.

1.13 Vulnerable or intimidated witnesses can also receive social support at all stages of the investigation. Three distinct roles for witness support have been identified and it is unlikely to be appropriate for the same person to be involved in all three. They are:

- > interview support – provided by someone independent of the police, who is not a party to the case being investigated and who sits in on the original investigative interview; they may be a friend or relative, but not necessarily so;
- > pre-trial support – provided to the witness in the period between the interview and the start of any trial. Appendix F sets out National Standards for Young Witness Preparation; and
- > court witness support – a person who may be known to the witness, but who is not a party to the proceedings, has no detailed knowledge of the case and may have assisted in preparing the witness for their court appearance. Appendix G sets out National Standards for the Court Witness Supporter in the Live Link Room.

1.14 Support measures are applicable to both defence and prosecution witnesses.

1.15 In reaching a decision on whether the Special Measures should be ordered, the courts must take account of all of the circumstances of the case, including the wishes of the witness and whether or not the Special Measure in question is likely to inhibit the evidence being effectively tested by any party to the proceedings (Section 19(3), Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999). It is, therefore, imperative that investigators establish at an early stage whether the witness is likely to qualify for a Special Measures direction and, if so, what particular measures, if any, will assist the witness to maximise the quality of their evidence. This will need to be discussed with the witness to ascertain their views. It is essential that the police, social care agencies, the prosecution and defence, and also court officials, take account of the individual circumstances of each witness, together with their expressed needs and wishes, in order to provide support sufficient to enable all witnesses to give their best evidence.

1.16 While it is important to establish at an early stage whether the witness is likely to qualify for Special Measures, it should be noted that the need for such measures may change from the time of the investigation to the time of the trial. The effect of this is that witnesses might be eligible for more or less support as time goes on, depending on changes in their circumstances. For example, in some circumstances, effective witness preparation might reduce the witness's anxiety, thus reducing the need for some or all of the Special Measures previously thought necessary. In other circumstances, the witness's anxiety might increase as the time of the trial approaches, particularly where intimidation or harassment occurs or is anticipated, thus increasing the need for Special Measures. It is, therefore, important that all those involved in maintaining contact with the witness and preparing them to give evidence continue to liaise with the prosecution or the defence, as appropriate, to ensure that any changes of circumstance are carefully considered and taken into account as necessary.

1.17 Special Measures are available to defence as well as prosecution witnesses, provided that the court is satisfied that the witness meets the qualifying criteria. While some of the notes and recommendations are drafted with the particular needs and concerns of the prosecution in mind, the guidelines in general apply to all those involved in investigating, interviewing, safeguarding and examining vulnerable and intimidated witnesses.

1.18 The Special Measures for use at court are subject to application to the judge or magistrate by the prosecution or defence before the trial. Special Measures are not automatically available and are subject to the discretion of the court.

1.19 The use of Special Measures in relation to child witnesses is described in Chapter 2, to vulnerable adult witnesses in Chapter 3, and to intimidated adult witnesses in Chapter 4. The role of witness supporters is described in detail in the different phases of the investigation covered in Chapters 2 to 6. Advice on the legal rules and good practice concerning the use of Special Measures at trial are dealt with in detail in Chapters 5 and 6. This is followed by a glossary explaining specialist terms in Appendix A. Further appendices provide detailed guidance or information referred to in the chapters, together with a list of useful sources and further reading.

Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses

1.20 Section 137 CJA 2003 provides for the admission of video-recorded interviews as evidence-in-chief in circumstances where:

- > the alleged offence is triable only on indictment or is a prescribed triable either-way offence;
- > the person interviewed on video claims to have witnessed (whether visually or in any other way):
 - events alleged by the prosecution to include conduct constituting the offence or part of the offence; or
 - events closely connected with such events;
- > the account given when the person was interviewed on video was given at a time when the alleged events were fresh in their memory; and
- > the court makes a direction that the recording or part of it should be admitted as the evidence-in-chief of the witness. The court can only make such a direction if:
 - the witness's recollection of the events in question is likely to have been significantly better when they gave the recorded account than it will be when they give oral evidence in the proceedings; and
 - it is in the interests of justice for the recording to be admitted, having regard in particular to:
 - the interval between the time of the events in question and the time when the recorded account was made;
 - any other factors that might affect the reliability of what the witness said in that account;
 - the quality of the recording; and
 - any views of the witness as to whether their evidence-in-chief should be given orally or by means of the recording.

1.21 In considering whether any part of a recording should not be admitted under Section 137 CJA 2003, the court must consider whether admitting that part would carry a risk of prejudice to the defendant and, if so, whether the interests of justice nevertheless require it to be admitted in view of the desirability of showing all or most of the interview (Section 138, CJA).

1.22 Other than video-recorded interviews as their evidence-in-chief, witnesses who come within the scope of Section 137 CJA 2003 who are not also vulnerable or intimidated (as defined in this chapter) will not qualify for Special Measures under Part II of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 (screens, live link, etc.).

1.23 The provisions of Section 137 CJA 2003 were still awaiting implementation at the time this edition of Achieving Best Evidence was written.

The status of the implementation of this Section at the time of reading can be established by checking Home Office circulars, at:

www.knowledgenetwork.gov.uk/HO/circular.nsf/ViewTemplate%20For%20HOCircularsWeb?OpenForm

Significant witnesses

1.24 Significant witnesses, sometimes referred to as 'key' witnesses, are those who:

- > have or claim to have witnessed, visually or otherwise, an indictable offence, part of such an offence or events closely connected with it (including any incriminating comments made by the suspected offender either before or after the offence) but who are unlikely to have video-recordings of their interviews admitted as evidence-in-chief under Section 137 CJA 2003 as a result of there having been a lengthy interval between the alleged event and the interview; and/or
- > have a particular relationship to the victim or have a central position in an investigation into an indictable offence.

1.25 Interviews with significant witnesses should usually be video-recorded because it is likely to:

- > increase the amount and quality of information gained from the witness;
- > increase the amount of information reported by the witness being recorded;
- > safeguard the integrity of the interviewer and the interview process; and
- > increase the opportunities for monitoring and for the development of interview skills.

1.26 There is no statutory provision for video-recordings of interviews with significant witnesses to be played as evidence-in-chief.

The options for adducing the testimony on the recording as evidence are set out in paragraph 4.8 of this document.

2 Planning and conducting interviews with children

Part 2A: Planning and preparing for interviews

Aims

By the end of Part 2A, the interviewer should be able to consider, with respect to each case:

- > the context of the allegation, including competence and compellability (paragraphs 2.1 to 2.28);
- > initial action, including consent, medical examinations and assessment (paragraphs 2.29 to 2.36);
- > the information needed to plan an interview (paragraphs 2.37 to 2.65);
- > preparing children for an interview (paragraphs 2.66 to 2.73); and
- > making use of the information needed to plan an interview (paragraphs 2.74 to 2.122), including when to consider whether an assessment by an intermediary is appropriate (paragraphs 2.96 to 2.101).

What follows in this part is a recommended procedure for planning and preparing for interviews with child witnesses. Thorough planning is essential to a successful investigation and interview. Even if concerns about the child's safety necessitate an early interview, an appropriate planning session is required to identify key issues and objectives. Time spent anticipating and covering issues early in the criminal investigation will be rewarded with an improved interview later on. It is important that, as far as possible, the case is thoroughly reviewed before an interview is embarked upon to ensure that all issues are covered and key questions asked, since the opportunity to do this will in most cases be lost once the interview(s) have been concluded.

Part 2B covers the interview process itself. While what follows in this part and Part 2B should not be regarded as a checklist to be rigidly worked through, the sound legal framework that it provides should not be departed from by interviewers unless they have discussed and agreed the reasons for doing so with their senior manager or an interview adviser (tier 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers' (ACPO's) Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)). Any such agreements and the rationale underpinning them should be recorded. It may subsequently be necessary to explain such departures at court.

The context of the allegation: the intersection of the child protection and criminal justice systems

2.1 Any video-recorded interview serves two primary purposes. These are:

- > evidence gathering for use in criminal proceedings; and
- > the evidence-in-chief of the child witness.

In addition, any relevant information gained during the interview can also be used to inform enquiries regarding significant harm under Section 47 of the Children Act 1989 and any subsequent actions to safeguard and promote the child's welfare, and in some cases, the welfare of other children.

2.2 Some information may be common to both purposes, but there will be issues specific to each to be considered at the planning stage. The video interview may additionally serve a useful purpose in informing any subsequent civil childcare proceedings, or in disciplinary proceedings against adult carers (e.g. in residential institutions), and its potential value for these too should not be overlooked (see paragraphs 2.30 to 2.33 on associated issues of consent).

The criminal investigation and the evidence-in-chief of child witnesses

2.3 As an opportunity to gather evidence in a criminal investigation, interviewers should ensure that they are aware of the types of information necessary to prove any particular charge that may arise. Referral information may give clues to likely charges, but should not be used to drive the interview solely towards confirming earlier suspicions or allegations.

The interviewer should keep an open mind as to what may or may not have happened to the child, and should not seek only to elicit details that will prove a hypothesis about the child's experience(s) constructed on the basis of the initial information. In abuse investigations, the possibility of gathering additional evidence from a medical examination of the child or from the scene of the alleged abuse should also be considered.

2.4 At this stage it will be helpful (if possible) to determine whether the child is believed to have been a victim of abuse or other crime, or instead a witness to a crime perpetrated upon someone else (this may not always be clear at the outset). The specific information, quality and degree of planning for the interview itself may differ depending on whether the child is a victim or a witness of a crime, or both. The subsequent support and therapeutic help offered to the child (and their family) may also be different depending on whether the child is a victim or witness or both. In addition, some children may need therapeutic help from the local children's services authority, health services or another agency to help them recover from the trauma associated with being a victim of a crime, even where there are no other concerns about their safety or welfare.

2.5 Children in appropriate cases who have witnessed an event and are not alleged victims should also be interviewed in the style advocated by this guidance, and by trained interviewers. This may be particularly important to remember at weekends or other times when normal interviewing personnel or facilities are less available.

2.6 The Special Measures introduced in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, together with the rephrasing of the competency requirement contained in the Act (see paragraphs 2.19 to 2.26), emphasise that no child should be precluded from an interview at an initial stage. Consideration of child witnesses should proceed on a case-by-case basis and there should be no automatic exclusion by reason of age or disability.

2.7 The Special Measures, including video-recorded evidence-in-chief, that child witnesses might be given access to at the trial should be outlined and the views of the child and of their carers (unless inappropriate) ascertained in respect of them. When obtaining the views of the child and their carer, it should be explained how the evidence-in-chief will be used and to whom it will be made available, and how the live TV link at court can be seen by the defendant and the public gallery in the courtroom. Their views about the possibility of having a supporter present while they are being interviewed and/or giving evidence should also be solicited (see paragraphs 2.102 to 2.105). While soliciting these views it is essential that the witness/carers understands that while their views will be listened to, access to Special Measures and/or a supporter during the trial is very much a decision for the court based on an application by the prosecution, and as such should not be taken for granted. Further details of Special Measures are set out in Chapter 6.

2.8 Although the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) is not part of the investigating team, and does not direct the investigation, an early meeting between the police and the CPS to discuss Special Measures may be appropriate (separate guidance on CPS–police liaison can be found in Early Special Measures Meetings between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service and Meetings between the Crown Prosecution Service and Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses: Practice Guidance (CPS, ACPO and the Home Office, 2001)). The police may also seek advice from the CPS at an early stage about any other evidential issues that may affect the way in which the investigation is conducted. In some exceptional cases the CPS may select suitably qualified counsel for advice at a very early stage.

2.9 The investigating team should consider whether the criminal investigation, and needs of the child, might be better served by obtaining a written statement rather than a video-recorded interview. This may be relevant if the child is older, or there is the possibility that the alleged abuse involved the use of video-recording (e.g. for the production of pornography). Research has shown that giving children the choice of whether or not to avail themselves of technological innovations in giving evidence can be as important as the technology itself. Even if the interview is video-recorded, some children may find it helpful to be able to write things down at certain points in the interview, e.g. if they are too embarrassed to speak about particular details. What is written down can then be read out by the interviewer or exhibited and shown to the jury in any subsequent trial.

Section 47 enquiries

2.10 At a minimum, such as instances in which the child has experienced no previous contact with the public services, the investigating team in child protection cases should include representatives from both the police and the local children's services authority. It may also be important to involve primary health care or educational professionals who know the child. For children who have had past or current involvement with that local children's services authority, useful information may already have been provided from different professionals or may be obtained from other adults who know the child (e.g. parents, carers, teachers, educational psychologists, youth workers, occupational therapists), and it may be that other individuals are offered a more active role in the planning process for the investigation (e.g. facial composite operators where the suspect is not known to the child).

2.11 Whenever suspicion has arisen that a child has suffered, or is likely to suffer, significant harm, there will be a strategy discussion or meeting involving the local children's services authority, the police and other professionals as appropriate, e.g. paediatrician, child and adolescent mental health services (Working Together to Safeguard Children (The Stationery Office, 2006), paragraphs 5.54 to 5.59 and Safeguarding Children: Working Together for Positive Outcomes (National Assembly for Wales, 2004), paragraphs 5.29 to 5.39). If enquiries under Section 47 of the Children Act 1989 are pursued following the strategy discussion/meeting, then the core assessment undertaken using the Framework for the Assessment of Children in Need and their Families (The Stationery Office, 2000) will provide considerable information about the child and their carer(s). (The assessment framework is summarised in Appendix C.) The investigative interview and criminal investigation will run alongside such Section 47 enquiries and the interviewer(s) might, therefore, have access to detailed information about the child that can be drawn upon when planning and conducting the investigative interview, depending upon the exact timing of the interview in relation to the Section 47 enquiries.

2.12 Where it has been agreed by the police and children's social care, in a strategy discussion/meeting, that it is in the best interests of the child that a full criminal investigation be carried out, the police are responsible for that investigation, including any investigative interview (video-recorded or otherwise) with the victim (recommendation 99 of the Victoria Climbié Inquiry Report). Having responsibility for the criminal investigation does not mean that the police should always take the lead in the investigative interview. Provided both the police officer and social worker have been adequately trained to interview child witnesses in accordance with the guidance set out in this document, there is no reason why either should not lead the interview. The decision as to who leads the interview should depend on who is able to establish the best rapport with the child. In circumstances where a social worker leads the interview, the police should retain their responsibility for the criminal investigation by ensuring that the interview is properly planned and that the police officer has an effective role in monitoring the interview (see paragraphs 2.87 and 2.88). Similarly, where a police officer leads the interview, the local authority should retain their duty to make enquiries under Section 47 of the Children Act 1989 by ensuring that the interview is properly planned and that the social worker has an effective role in monitoring the interview.

2.13 Enquiries should be carried out in such a way as to minimise distress to the child and to ensure that families are treated sympathetically and with respect. The decision as to whether to conduct a joint investigative interview or joint visits should be determined by what is in the best interests of the child, for example by limiting the number of occasions that the child has to relate an account of what has happened to them or reducing the frequency of agency visits to the child's home. Investigators should consult Local Safeguarding Children Board safeguarding children procedures about how enquiries relating to children suffering or likely to suffer significant harm (under Section 47 of the Children Act 1989) and associated criminal investigations should be conducted and the circumstances in which joint enquiries are necessary and/or appropriate.

2.14 Different circumstances experienced by the child prior to the interview will have implications both for the amount of knowledge that may already be available about the child to be shared between agencies, and subsequently for the manner in which any investigative interview is planned and proceeds:

- > Some children will hitherto have been unknown to the local children's services authority, but known to their GP, health visitor or school.
- > Some children may not be known to the local children's services authority, but may be known, for example, to child and adolescent mental health services or education professionals because of emotional or behavioural problems, or special educational needs.
- > Some children will be known to the local children's services authority as open cases or as previously open cases, as well as to health and education services.

2.15 Whatever the child's circumstances, the police officer, the children's social care worker and any other members of the investigating team should give a proper explanation of their roles to the child and their carer. The child's knowledge and understanding should be monitored throughout the investigation.

2.16 Children who have previously been unknown to the local children's services authority and the police are likely to have least understanding of the interviewing process, and of the nature of professional interventions. The way in which the purpose of the interview and the roles of the investigating team are explained to the child and their carer(s) will need to take account of the fact that they have had no previous contact with public services regarding child protection concerns about a child's safety or welfare.

2.17 Children who have previous experience of public services may be more knowledgeable about the roles of different personnel, though their experiences will have varied depending on their individual circumstances. However, no assumptions should be made about a particular child's level of knowledge of public service personnel, especially children's social care workers, who may have been involved with the family for a number of possible reasons (e.g. children in need services, services for disabled adults, or adults with mental health problems). If there have been concerns about a child's safety and/or welfare or current concerns have resulted in the consideration of an investigative interview, an initial assessment of the child's needs and their family members will have already been undertaken by the local children's services authority.

2.18 Consideration should be given to holding a discussion between the investigating officer and the CPS where necessary to discuss what Special Measures might be needed to assist the witness before and during the trial (see Early Special Measures Meetings between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service and Meetings between the Crown Prosecution Service and Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses: Practice Guidance (CPS, ACPO and the Home Office, 2001)).

Competence, compellability and availability for cross-examination: the legal position

2.19 Since the video-recorded interview might serve as the child's evidence-in-chief at court, the investigating team must also consider the child's competence, compellability, and availability for cross-examination.

2.20 Section 53 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 provides that in principle 'all persons are (whatever their age) competent to give evidence'. The Section qualifies this principle by saying that persons are incompetent as witnesses where the court finds that they are unable to understand questions put to them, or unable to give answers to them which can be understood; but Section 54(3) makes it clear that in considering this question a court must bear in mind the various Special Measures that are available under Sections 23 to 30 of the Act (for example 'communications aids', available under Section 30, see paragraph 6.25).

2.21 Thus, where children are to give evidence, it is no longer necessary, as it was at one time, to persuade the court that he or she 'is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth'.

2.22 Where a video-recorded interview is to be played in court as evidence-in-chief, there is no need for the witness to be sworn. Section 31(2) and (3) of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 expressly provides that such a video-recorded statement, if admitted by the court as the evidence of the witness, shall have the same legal status as that witness's direct oral testimony in court – even where, if giving direct oral testimony in court, the witness would have been required to take an oath.

2.23 However, just because the witness who was interviewed on video was competent it does not necessarily follow that the court will admit the recording in evidence. By Section 27(2) of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 the court may refuse to admit such a statement if, in all the circumstances, it believes it would not be 'in the interests of justice' to do so; and under Section 78 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 the court has a more general discretion to exclude any piece of evidence that the prosecution wish to call, where it believes the use of such evidence would make the trial 'unfair'. One circumstance in which a court might decide to exclude such evidence is where the statement is clearly prejudicial to the defendant, but the court feels that it is of very little weight.

2.24 In the light of this, it will usually be wise to explore with a witness who is very young, or who has a learning difficulty, what their understanding is of the difference between truth and lies (see paragraph 2.143). Where, as normal, the recording is admitted in evidence, this would often be of help to the court in assessing the weight to put on the evidence. In exceptional cases where an attempt is made to persuade the court to exclude the evidence, it might help to rebut the argument that the court ought to exclude the evidence because it is seriously unreliable.

2.25 A witness is usually not only competent to give evidence, but also compellable. This means that they can be legally required to attend trial (or, where a 'Special Measures direction' has been given to this effect, to be available for a video-recorded pre-trial cross-examination). In general, however, the fact that a witness is compellable does not mean that they can be legally required to give any kind of preliminary statement to the police – even the sort of statement that is made under this guidance.

2.26 It does not necessarily follow that because a witness is competent and compellable, the CPS will insist on making them attend court to give evidence if unwilling to do so. The prosecution is not legally required to call every piece of evidence available, and in some cases may proceed without a particular witness's evidence if they believe they can secure a conviction without it. In cases where they believe the evidence of a particular witness is essential, the Code for Crown Prosecutors leaves it open to the CPS to drop the case if they think that it would be particularly damaging to the witness to proceed (in such cases the child witness and their carer must be informed of the implications of this decision). In deciding whether to include a particular witness's evidence, and whether to proceed with the case at all, the CPS will always take account of the wishes of the witness (although they will not necessarily defer to them). Reports to the CPS should always include clear information about the wishes of the witness, and their parents or carers, about going to court. The CPS may in any event need to seek further information from the investigating team, and should always be kept up to date throughout the case to ensure a continuous review.

2.27 A video-recorded interview is usually only admissible as evidence-in-chief at trial where the person who made it is 'available for cross-examination'. By Section 27(4) of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, however, 'available for cross-examination' includes being available for a cross-examination held in private and in advance of trial, subject to the discretion of the court (when implemented, Section 28 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 will make this facility available for all eligible witnesses where an application is granted by the court), while Section 21 makes it the normal procedure for witnesses under 17 years of age when the offence is a sexual one. In this connection, it should also be remembered that where the defendant is unrepresented, Sections 34 to 40 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 now impose serious restrictions on the defendant to cross-examine in person (see Chapter 6 for further information on Special Measures).

2.28 Although a video-recorded interview cannot normally be played at trial if the witness is not 'available for cross-examination' there are some exceptions to this set out in Section 116 of the Criminal Justice Act 2003 that give the judge discretion to allow the court to hear the pre-trial statements of witnesses who are unable to give evidence for various specified reasons. These include the fact that the witness is dead, or 'by reason of his bodily or mental condition unfit to attend as a witness', or does not give evidence at trial 'through fear or because he or she is kept out of the way'. It must be remembered, however, that the judge has the final word on whether or not the statement will be admitted (see also Appendix B of this document).

Initial contact with child witnesses

2.29 The need to consider a video-recorded interview will not always be immediately apparent either to the first police officer who has contact with the child or other professionals involved prior to the police being informed. Even where it is apparent, the need to take immediate action in terms of securing medical attention, ensuring the safety of the child (particularly in instances where there is the possibility of 'significant harm' under the Children Act 1989), and making initial decisions about the criminal investigation plan might be such that some initial questioning is necessary. Any initial questioning should be intended to elicit a brief account of what is alleged to have taken place. A more detailed account should not be pursued at this stage but should be left until the investigative interview takes place as described in Part 2B. Such a brief account should include where and when the event is alleged to have taken place and who was involved or otherwise present. This information is likely to influence decisions made in respect of the following aspects of the criminal investigation plan:

- > forensic and medical examination of the victim;
- > scene of crime examination;
- > interviewing of other witnesses;
- > arrest of alleged offender(s); and
- > witness support.

In these circumstances, any early discussions with the child should, as far as possible, adhere to the following basic principles:

- A. Listen to the child.
- B. Do NOT stop a child who is freely recalling significant events.
- C. Where it is necessary to ask questions, they should, as far as possible in the circumstances, be open-ended or specific-closed rather than forced-choice, leading or multiple (see paragraphs 2.160 to 2.174).
- D. Ask no more questions than are necessary in the circumstances to take immediate action.

- E. Make a comprehensive note of the discussion, taking care to record the timing, setting and people present as well as what was said by the child and anybody else present (particularly the actual questions asked of the child).
- F. Make a note of the demeanour of the child and anything else that might be relevant to any subsequent formal interview or the wider investigation.
- G. Fully record any comments made by the witness or events that might be relevant to the legal process up to the time of the interview.

Consent

2.30 At all times, interviewers should take steps to explain the purpose of any proposed video-recorded interview to the child, at a level appropriate to the child's age and understanding. Such an explanation should include the following topics:

- > the benefits/disadvantages of having or not having the interview video-recorded;
- > who may see the video-recorded interview (including the alleged offender both before the trial and at court); and
- > the different purposes to which a video-recorded interview may be put (e.g. if it appears the video may be useful in disciplinary proceedings against a member of staff who is suspected of abusing or neglecting a child in their care).

2.31 The child should be advised that, should the case proceed, whether a video-recording is made or not, they may be required to attend court to answer further questions directly (e.g. cross-examination). A live link facility will normally be available to enable the witness to give best evidence at court. There is a presumption that this aid will normally be required by the child (see Chapter 6). The existence of a video-recorded interview does not by itself guarantee that it will be used.

2.32 Written consent to be video-recorded is not necessary from the child, but it is unlikely to be practicable or desirable to video-record an interview with a reluctant or hostile child. The interviewers are responsible for ensuring that, as far as possible, the child is freely participating in the interview, and not merely complying with a request from adult authority figures.

2.33 The investigating team may need to interview a suspected child victim without the knowledge of the parent or carer in certain situations. Relevant circumstances would include the possibility that a child would be threatened or otherwise coerced into silence; a strong likelihood that important evidence would be destroyed; or that the child in question did not wish the parent to be involved at that stage, and is competent to take that decision (see Working Together to Safeguard Children (The Stationery Office, 2006), paragraph 5.65 and Safeguarding Children: Working Together for Positive Outcomes (National Assembly for Wales, 2004), paragraph 5.38). Proceeding with the interview in the absence of parental knowledge will need to be carefully managed in interventions with the family by the local children's services authority.

Medical examinations

2.34 Consideration should be given to the timing, purpose and content of any medical examination or paediatric evaluation in relation to the interview. Sometimes the medical examination will have preceded the interview, for example after 'acute' abuse or if the examination needs to take place before a laboratory closes (e.g. for identification of sexually transmitted diseases). The doctor may be aware of problems that might be making the child uncomfortable, such as soreness or vaginal discharge, and/or may suggest the significance of any symptoms reported by the child at the time of the abuse or later. When examining children, doctors should take care to avoid asking leading questions or anticipating the investigative interview. They should, however, make contemporaneous notes of any spontaneous comments by the child concerning the origins or circumstances giving rise to the evaluation or examination. On other occasions, the medical examination will be after the interview; in such cases where a medical examination is a possibility, a discussion should take place with the paediatrician or police surgeon who will undertake this to ensure that expectations of possible outcomes of the examination are realistic and appropriate. It is essential that all notes and records concerning medical examinations and decisions made in the course of investigations are preserved, as they may be required for disclosure as part of any subsequent criminal or civil court proceedings.

2.35 Consideration should also be given to the identity of the examiner. The evaluation should only be carried out by suitably qualified and experienced clinicians, and should not be confined solely to examination of the child's genital and/or anal areas. Guidance is available from the British Paediatric Association Child Interest Group about the training and experience of such a clinician and the content of the paediatric evaluation. A child who is concerned that abuse may have damaged them in some way can be reassured by a sensitive examination. Conversely, children who do not allege penetration should not receive unnecessary medical examinations.

Psychiatric/psychological assessment interviews

2.36 The role of child and adolescent mental health specialists should be considered where appropriate. Where assessment interviews by a psychiatrist or a psychologist take place, their primary purpose is to inform the childcare planning process. For this reason they will not resemble interviews conducted in accordance with this guidance. However, such assessment interviews can also be of assistance to the criminal investigation, including the planning process for a video-recorded interview. The limits and expectations of such assessments should be agreed with the psychiatrist or psychologist prior to the assessment taking place.

Planning and preparing for the interview

2.37 The purpose of an investigative interview is to ascertain the witness's account of the alleged event(s) and any other information that would assist the investigation. A well-conducted interview will only occur if appropriate planning has taken place. The importance of planning cannot be overstated. The success of an interview – and thus an investigation – could hinge on it. Even if the circumstances of the case are such that it is essential that an early interview takes place, a planning session is required that takes account of all the information available about the child at the time and identifies the key issues and objectives. Attention should be paid at all times to issues of age, gender, race, culture, ethnicity, religion and language.

2.38 In some cases, it might be advisable for there to be a discussion with the CPS in accordance with the guidance set out in Early Special Measures Meetings between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service and Meetings between the Crown Prosecution Service and Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses (CPS, ACPO and the Home Office, 2001). Where such a discussion takes place, there should be a decision about the form in which the statement is to be taken (video-recorded or written). Such decisions must take account of the child's expressed preferences and those of their carers (unless inappropriate).

Planning information

2.39 The planning stage of an interview involves some consideration of three types of information:

- > information about the child witness (see paragraphs 2.40 to 2.52);
- > information about the alleged offence(s) (see paragraphs 2.53 to 2.55); and
- > information important to the investigation (see paragraphs 2.56 to 2.65).

At this stage, interviewers need to have differing amounts of knowledge about each type of information. In a general sense, they need to know as much as is possible in the circumstances about the child and a little about the alleged offence and information important to the investigation.

Information about the child witness

2.40 Consideration needs to be given to a number of factors pertaining to the child, their family and their background in the planning of the investigation and interview, and in considering any request made by the child about support. Some of this information may exist as a result of the assessment undertaken as part of the local children's services authority under

Box 2.1: Checklist of desirable information

Factors to be considered at the planning stage include:

- > child's age;
- > child's race, culture, ethnicity and first language;
- > child's religion;
- > child's gender;
- > child's sexuality (where the child is old enough for this to be relevant);
- > child's preferred name/form of address;
- > any physical and/or learning impairments;
- > any specialist health and/or mental health needs;
- > any medication being taken and its potential impact on any proposed interview;
- > child's cognitive abilities (e.g. memory, attention);
- > child's linguistic abilities (as a general rule of thumb, an intermediary may be able to help improve the quality of evidence of any child who is unable to detect and cope with misunderstanding, particularly in the court context, i.e. if a child seems unlikely to be able to recognise a problematic question or tell the questioner that they have not understood, assessment by an intermediary should be considered);
- > child's current emotional state and range of behaviours;
- > likely impact on the child's behaviour of recalling of traumatic events;
- > child's family members/carers and nature of relationships (including foster or residential carers);
- > child's relationship to alleged perpetrator;
- > child's overall sexual education, knowledge and experiences;
- > types of discipline used with the child (e.g. smacking, withholding privileges);
- > bathing, toileting and bedtime routines;
- > sleeping arrangements;
- > any significant stress(es) recently experienced by the child and/or family (e.g. bereavement, sickness, domestic violence, job loss, moving house, divorce, etc.);
- > current or previous contact with public services (including previous contact with the police or the local children's services authority); and
- > any other relevant information or intelligence known.

Working Together to Safeguard Children (The Stationery Office, 2006), or may be provided by other professionals consulted or involved in the planning process. Other information might best be provided by the child's parent(s) or carer(s). A checklist of some of the desirable information is provided in Box 2.1, and, again, interviewers may find the assessment framework in Appendix C a useful guide when considering the child in their family context. The companion practice guidance, Assessing Children in Need and their Families: Practice Guidance (Department of Health, 2000) (see the Quality Protects website at www.dfes.gov.uk/qualityprotects and the website of the National Assembly for Wales at: www.wales.gov.uk) provides detailed advice on assessments involving black children and children with disabilities. The interviewing team will need to balance the need to obtain as much of this information as possible with their desire to conduct the interview as soon as is practicable.

Box 2.1 is not comprehensive: investigators will develop their own agenda in the light of their experience or knowledge of the individual child and of all other relevant circumstances. Information on these issues will inform decisions about the structure, style, duration and pace of the interview. Children of the same age can differ widely in their development, particularly if they have been abused or neglected. Children may also react to the investigative process itself because it is unfamiliar, and aspects such as a medical examination or personal questions may be particularly difficult and/or upsetting for the child (although a sensitively conducted medical examination or paediatric evaluation can be reassuring).

Previous interventions

2.41 In cases where the child is a suspected or known victim of previous abuse, the investigating team may also find it helpful to address the issues listed in Box 2.2.

Box 2.2: Checklist of additional factors

Additional factors to be addressed in cases where the child is known or suspected to have been previously abused include:

- > the detailed nature of the child's attachment to their parents;
- > the age and developmental level of the child at the onset of abuse;
- > abuse frequency and duration;
- > whether different forms of abuse co-exist;
- > the relationship of the child to the alleged abuser(s);
- > the type and severity of the abusive act;
- > the existence of multiple perpetrators;
- > the degree of physical violence and aggression used;
- > whether the child was coerced into reciprocating sexual acts;
- > the existence of adult or peer support;
- > whether or not the child has been able to tell someone about the abuse; and
- > the parental reaction to disclosure/allegation.

Race, gender, culture and ethnic background

2.42 The child's race, gender, culture, ethnicity and first language should be given due consideration by the interviewing team. They have a responsibility to be informed about and to take into account the needs and expectations of children from the variety of specific minority groups in their local area. Other useful guidance can be found in the assessment framework (see Appendix C) and companion practice guidance, Assessing Children in Need and their Families: Practice Guidance (Department of Health, 2000). The guide Race and the Courts (Judicial Studies Board, 1999) (available at www.jsboard.co.uk/publications.htm) provides a helpful summary of different religions and associated holy days and festivals. The chapter by M. Page and G. Precey (see Appendix Q) also includes discussion of related issues. The interviewing team's knowledge about the child's religion, culture, customs and beliefs will have a bearing upon their understanding of the child's account, including the language and allusions the child may make, as well as, for example, the child's beliefs about reward and punishment.

2.43 The investigating team needs to bear in mind that some families and children may have experienced discrimination and/or oppression through their contact with government agencies and local authorities. Their experiences of racism, for example, may result in them distrusting the professionals involved in an investigative interview. Asylum-seeking children and child refugees may have a fear of disclosing abuse because of what may happen to them and their family.

2.44 It is also important that the investigating team considers the complexities of multiple discrimination, for example in the case of a black, female, disabled child, and of individuals' experiences of discrimination. The specific needs and experiences of dual-heritage children need also to be taken into account.

2.45 Some possible relevant considerations include the following – although this list is in no way intended to be exhaustive. Interviewers must avoid ethnocentric, judgemental attitudes towards particular forms of child rearing:

- > customs or beliefs which may hinder the child's participation in an interview on certain days (e.g. holy days) or may otherwise affect the child's participation (e.g. if older children are fasting);
- > the relationship to authority figures within different minority ethnic groups; for example, children may be expected to show respect to adults and authority figures by not referring to them by their first names, and by not correcting or contradicting them;
- > the manner in which love and affection are demonstrated;
- > the degree to which extended family members are involved in the parenting of the child. All cultures place a high value on nurturing children, but achieve this through a variety of family structures;
- > the degree of emphasis placed on learning skills in independence and self-care; and
- > issues of shame; for example, Muslim girls may fear bringing shame upon themselves or their families if they disclose abuse, and this may be further affected by expectations of them with respect to arranged marriages. Parents or carers may inhibit the child from disclosing with talk of shaming the family.

Other life experiences

2.46 Interviewers must also consider the possible impact on the child of one or more of the following that the child may have experienced: abuse, neglect, domestic violence and discrimination based on race or disability. There is no single 'diagnostic' symptom of any of the above, but some possible effects on children are provided in Boxes 2.3 to 2.6. It must be recognised that children who are abused in different ways or who suffer the impact of discrimination in some form may exhibit all, none or some of the behaviours listed. As a result of their culture, language or religion, children may also have had other experiences that impact on the interview situation.

Box 2.3: Some possible effects of child abuse and neglect

These include:

- > fear;
- > behaviour problems;
- > sexualised behaviours;
- > poor self-esteem;
- > post-traumatic stress disorder;
- > negative social behaviour (e.g. increased aggression, non-compliance, conduct);
- > disorder, criminal activity;
- > self-injury or suicidal behaviour;
- > increased emotional problems (e.g. anxiety, depression); and
- > lower intellectual functioning and academic achievement.

Box 2.4: Some possible effects of racism

These include:

- > fear;
- > poor self-esteem;
- > fear of betrayal of community;
- > mistrust of people from outside own community;
- > difficulty in establishing positive (racial) identity; and
- > increased vulnerability to racist abuse.

Box 2.5: Some possible effects of discrimination based on impairment(s)

These include:

- > lack of autonomy, experience of being patronised by able-bodied people;
- > feelings of being perceived as 'voiceless object';
- > difficulty in establishing positive self-identity as a disabled child;
- > experience of being isolated (geographically, physically, socially);
- > dependency;
- > feelings of being perceived as 'asexual'; and
- > increased vulnerability to abuse.

Box 2.6: Some possible effects of domestic violence

These include:

- > fear – for own, siblings' and abused parent's safety;
- > sadness/depression, possibly reflected in self-harm or suicidal tendencies;
- > anger, which may be demonstrated in aggressive behaviour;
- > negative impact on health (e.g. asthma, eczema, eating disorders or developmental delays); and
- > impact on education (e.g. aggression at school, lack of concentration, truanting).

It is important for interviewers to consider these factors in relation to each individual child, rather than work from assumptions based on stereotypes associated with any minority group. Being sensitive to such factors will enable interviewers to create a safe and non-judgemental interview environment for the child. It is essential that the interview process itself does not reinforce any aspects of racist or otherwise discriminatory or abusive experiences for the child.

Assessment prior to the interview

2.47 Interviewers may often decide that the needs of the child and the needs of criminal justice are best served by an assessment of the child prior to the interview taking place, particularly if the child has not had previous or current involvement with the local children's services authority or other public services. Such an assessment should be considered for any child, and offers the opportunity to explore the factors listed in Box 2.7.

2.48 Interviewers must be careful to balance the need to ensure that the child is ready and informed about the interview process against the possibility of any suggestion of coaching or collusion (for further discussion about coaching see R v Momodou and Limani [2005] EWCA Crim 177).

Box 2.7: General factors to be explored via an assessment prior to interview

These include:

- > the child's preferred name/form of address;
- > the child's ability and willingness to talk within a formal interview setting to a police officer, children's social care worker or other trained interviewer;
- > an explanation to the child of the reason for an interview;
- > the ground rules for the interview;
- > the opportunity to practise answering open questions;
- > the child's cognitive, social and emotional development (e.g. does the child appear to be 'streetwise' but in reality has limited understanding?);
- > the child's use of language and understanding of relevant concepts such as time and age (as a general rule of thumb, an intermediary may be able to help improve the quality of evidence of any child who is unable to detect and cope with misunderstanding, particularly in the court context, i.e. if a child seems unlikely to be able to recognise a problematic question or tell the questioner that they have not understood, assessment by an intermediary should be considered);
- > any special requirements the child may have (e.g. do they suffer from separation anxiety or have an impairment? are they known to have suffered past abuse, or to have previously undergone an investigative interview?);
- > any apparent clinical or psychiatric problems (e.g. panic attacks, depression) that may impact upon the interview, and for which the child may require referral for a formal assessment; and
- > an assessment of the child's competency to give consent to interview and medical examination.

2.49 Again, the assessment framework (summarised in Appendix C) may be helpful. A full written record of any such assessment(s) must be kept and must be referred to in the body of the Section 9 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement that reports on the planning and conduct of the interview. This record should be disclosed to the CPS under the requirements of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996.

2.50 Interviewers should have clear objectives for assessment(s) prior to interview and should apply this guidance on talking with children during such assessment. For example, they should avoid discussing substantive issues (in any detail) and must not lead the child on substantive matters. An interviewer should never stop a child who is freely recalling significant events. Instead, as above (paragraph 2.29), the interviewer must make a full written record of the discussion, making a note of the timing and personnel present, as well as what was said and in what order. The interviewer should begin by explaining the objectives of the interview to the child; one possibility may be as follows:

'We will talk about the things you are concerned about tomorrow. Today, I want to get to know you a bit better and explain what will happen if we do a video interview tomorrow.'

The interviewer can also use the opportunity to answer any questions the child might have about the conduct of the interview and explain any transport arrangements. Some interviewers use this opportunity to introduce some of the ground rules to the child, while others do so exclusively on the recording as part of the rapport phase of the interview (see paragraph 2.142). If any of the ground rules are introduced at this stage, then they should be repeated in the formal interview to demonstrate that the necessary procedures have been completed.

2.51 The needs of the child may require that this assessment should take place over a number of sessions. No inducements should be offered for complying with the investigative process.

2.52 It is likely that for some children, assessment(s) will indicate that their needs are not best met by proceeding with a full formal interview.

Information about the alleged offence(s)

2.53 It is preferable (and not always necessary or essential) that the interviewer knows little detail of the alleged offence(s) for the purposes of the interview. However, in order to plan and prepare for the interview, the interviewer will need a little general knowledge about:

- > the type of alleged offence(s);
- > the approximate time and location of the alleged offence(s);
- > the scene of the alleged offence(s) (note that this should only be enough general knowledge to help the interviewer understand what might be said during the interview); and
- > how the alleged offence(s) came to the notice of the police.

2.54 Where the interviewer is also the investigating officer and has been involved in a multi-agency strategy discussion (Working Together to Safeguard Children (The Stationery Office, 2006), paragraphs 5.54 to 5.59 and Safeguarding Children: Working Together for Positive Outcomes (National Assembly for Wales, 2004), paragraphs 5.29 to 5.39), it is accepted that circumstances and practical resource considerations might be such that they are likely to know more about the alleged offence(s) than is set out above. In this situation, the interviewer should try as far as possible to avoid contaminating the interview process with such knowledge.

2.55 It is also accepted that circumstances and resource considerations might be such that it could be necessary for an interviewer to interview more than one witness during the course of an investigation. In such a situation, care should be taken to avoid asking questions of a witness based upon the responses of previous interviewees, because this could contaminate the witness's account.

Information important to the investigation

2.56 While obtaining an account of the alleged event is essential, other matters might need to be covered during the interview in order to progress the investigation. These matters can be regarded as 'information important to the investigation'. Obtaining a complete picture of all the relevant issues within an interview is essential because it will provide the investigating officer with the information necessary to conduct a comprehensive investigation. It could also prove beneficial in discussions with the CPS if the subject of witness assessment is raised. Information important to the investigation falls into two categories: general investigative practice (see paragraph 2.58) and case-specific material (see paragraphs 2.59 to 2.65). Where such information has not already been covered as part of the child's account, interviewers should consider introducing it either in the latter part of the questioning phase (see paragraphs 2.153 to 2.178) or in a subsequent interview session, depending on the complexity of the case and what is alleged to have been witnessed by the interviewee.

2.57 The amount of knowledge that the interviewer has about information important to the investigation prior to the interview depends on what they know about what is alleged to have been witnessed by the child. As noted in paragraph 2.53, it is preferable that the interviewer knows little detail of the alleged offence(s) before the interview. Only a little knowledge that could form the basis of potential questions about information important to the investigation is, therefore, likely to be available to the interviewer at this point in time. However, while planning the interview, the interviewer should apply what they know of the alleged offences to determine the areas of general investigative practice that might need to be covered in the interview. More case-specific material could either be made available to the interviewer (from the investigating officer, interview monitor or recording equipment operator) after an attempt has been made to elicit and clarify the child's account or be included in the planning information for a later interview to avoid potential contamination of the process.

Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice

2.58 Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice includes:

- > points to prove any alleged offence(s);
- > information that should be considered when assessing a witness's identification evidence, as suggested in R v Turnbull and Camelo ([1976] 63 Cr App R 132) and embodied in the mnemonic ADVOKATE (Practical Guide to Investigative Interviewing (National Centre for Policing Excellence, most recent edition 2004)):
 - A Amount of time under observation
 - D Distance from the eyewitness to the person/incident
 - V Visibility – including time of day, street lighting, etc.
 - O Obstructions – anything getting in the way of the witness's view
 - K Known or seen before – did the witness know, or had they seen, the alleged perpetrator before?
 - A Any reason to remember – was there something specific that made the person/incident memorable?
 - T Time lapse – how long since the witness last saw the alleged perpetrator?
 - E Errors or material discrepancies;
- > anything said by the witness to a third party after the incident (evidence of first complaint etc.); and
- > any other witnesses present.

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of the information important to the investigation pertaining to general investigative practice varies according to the circumstances of the case.

Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material

2.59 Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material includes:

- > how and where any items used in the commission of the offence (e.g. clothing, vehicles, weapons, cash, documents, other property) were disposed of, if the child might have some knowledge of this;
- > any background information relevant to the child's account (e.g. matters that might enhance or detract from the credibility of the child's evidence, such as the amount of any alcohol consumed);
- > any lifestyle information relevant to the child's account;
- > where the child has knowledge of an alleged victim or a suspected perpetrator, an exploration of their relationship, background history, places frequented and any events related or similar to the matter under investigation; and

- > any risk assessment issues that the child might know about that concern the likely conduct of the alleged perpetrator, family or associates (this should be dealt with after the child's account has been covered, to avoid confusion).

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of any case-specific material varies according to the circumstances of the alleged offence, the nature of any relationship between the child and the alleged perpetrator and what is alleged to have been seen, heard or otherwise experienced.

2.60 Significant evidential inconsistencies and significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information) are discrete categories of case-specific material.

Significant evidential inconsistencies

2.61 During the course of an investigation it may be necessary to ask a child to explain a significant evidential inconsistency between what they have said during the interview and other material gathered during the course of the investigation. Such inconsistencies would, for example, include significant differences between the account provided by the child during the interview and:

- > what the child is reported to have said on a previous occasion;
- > the accounts of other witnesses; and
- > injuries sustained by either the alleged victim or the alleged offender.

2.62 There are a number of reasons for significant evidential inconsistencies between what a child says during an interview and other material gathered during the course of an investigation. Many of these reasons are perfectly innocent in their nature (e.g. genuine mistakes by the child or others stemming from a memory-encoding or recall failure, or subconscious contamination of their memory by external influences), but occasions may arise where the child is motivated to either fabricate or exaggerate their account of an event.

2.63 Whatever the reason for the significant evidential inconsistency, occasions may arise where it is necessary to ask the child to explain it. The following principles should be taken into account when considering whether, when and how to solicit such an explanation:

- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought where the inconsistency is a significant one.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after careful consideration has concluded that there is no obvious explanation for them.

> Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after the child's account has been fully explored, either at the end of the interview or in a further interview, as appropriate.

> Interviewers should always be aware that the purpose of asking a child to explain an evidential inconsistency is to pursue the truth in respect of the matter under investigation; it is not to put pressure on a child to alter their account.

> Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should take account of the extent to which the child may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence.

> Questions intended to elicit an explanation for evidential inconsistencies should be carefully planned, phrased tactfully and presented in a non-confrontational manner.

Significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information)

2.64 During the course of an investigation it may be necessary to ask a child about relevant information that they have not mentioned in their account. This may arise, for example, where others say that the alleged offender was carrying an object, or that the alleged offender's behaviour was unusual or that there was something particular about the alleged offender's description or vehicle, but this is not mentioned by the child. There are a number of reasons why this type of information can be omitted from an account, and situations may arise where it is important to seek an explanation from the child. In these circumstances, it may be necessary to ask a question to establish whether the child has knowledge of the information. Such a question should only be asked after the child's account has been fully explored, at the end of the interview (or in a further interview if necessary).

2.65 When planning such a question, the interviewer should consider:

- > whether the information omitted by the child is likely to be important enough to be worthy of explanation;
- > the extent to which the child may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence; and
- > which type of question is most likely to elicit the information in a manner least likely to have an adverse effect on the value of any answer.

A plan for soliciting an explanation for the omission of case-relevant information from a child's account must take account of the reliability of any answer. For example, a useful starting point might be to ask the child a specific-closed question, such as: 'What else can you tell me about the incident?' If the child's answer:

- > includes the case-relevant information but lacks sufficient detail, the interviewer should ask the child to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'). When the case-relevant information has been covered, the child should be tactfully asked to explain its omission from their account, unless the reason for its omission is apparent from the child's response or the circumstances of the case;

- > does not include the case-relevant information, a further decision will need to be made as to whether it is necessary to ask a question that might be regarded as leading (e.g. 'Do you recall seeing/hearing...?'). It should be noted that if the answer to such a leading question contains the case-relevant information, it is likely to be of limited evidential value. The evidential value of such an answer may, however, be enhanced if the interviewer then asks the child to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'), followed by questions intended tactfully to elicit an explanation for its omission from their account (unless the reason for the omission is apparent from the child's response or the circumstances of the case).

Where the child cannot recall the case-relevant information, this may be due to not attending to the information or to memory loss. Further reading on case-relevant information can be found in The Evaluation of the Investigation and Legal Process Involving Child Abuse Offences to Establish a Model of Investigation for Investigators by K.B. Marlow (unpublished MSC thesis, Portsmouth, 2002).

Preparing the child for an interview

2.66 Children should always be prepared for an interview. In some cases, this might be fairly brief and take place immediately prior to the interview. In other instances, it might be necessary to take more time (e.g. where the child can also be considered to be an intimidated witness) and/or for it to take place several hours or days before the interview.

2.67 The preparation of the child should include an explanation of the purpose of the interview and the reason for visually recording it (including who might subsequently view it), the role of the interviewer(s) and anybody else to be present, the location of the interview and roughly how long it is likely to take. The interviewer(s) should also outline the general structure of the interview and provide some explanation of the ground rules that apply to it (including the child not making any assumptions about the interviewer's knowledge of the event). Substantive issues relating to the evidence should not be discussed while preparing a child for an interview.

2.68 The child's non-abusing carer(s) should also be provided with suitable information at this stage. For example, they should be discouraged from discussing the details of the alleged offence(s) with their child or any other individual who may be involved in the investigation, but must be able to reassure the child who wishes to talk or express anxieties. They should be asked to document carefully any discussions they have with their child or other persons regarding the allegation or investigation

(e.g. who was present, date/time and setting, what exactly was said). The child should never be offered inducements for complying with the investigative process. Carer(s) should also be encouraged to provide emotional support to the child, such as physical comfort and reassurance. They should be given information about what further role, if any, they may have in planning the interview or in being present while it is conducted (or given reasons why the interviewer(s) would prefer them not to be present). Where possible, any support needs of the carer(s) that are identified should be brought to the attention of the relevant authorities/agencies. In cases where the child may have been abused within the family, concerns may arise as to the non-abusing carer's ability to support the child or to take seriously what the child has said.

2.69 Any issues or concerns raised by the child or their carer(s) should be addressed while preparing them for the interview (e.g. welfare issues or concerns about the possibility of a later court appearance).

2.70 Some children might need to spend more time getting to know the interviewer(s) before they are ready and/or willing to take part in an investigative interview. The interviewer(s) should consider whether one or more meetings with a child should be planned to take place prior to the interview because this familiarisation process may take some time.

2.71 Assistance should be sought if necessary from interview supervisors and interview advisers concerning the issues that might arise during the preparation of a child witness for an interview.

2.72 Full written notes must be kept of the preparation of a child for an interview and must be revealed to the CPS on request.

2.73 The information obtained to plan the interview should be reviewed and revised if necessary in the light of any additional information that arises from preparing the child witness for the interview.

Using the planning information

2.74 The planning information should be used to:

- > set aims and objectives for the interview;
- > determine the techniques used within the phased interview (see Part 2B); and
- > decide:
 - the means by which the interview is to be recorded;
 - who should conduct the interview and if anybody else should be present (including social care support for the child);
 - if anybody should monitor the interview (investigating officer, supervising officer, specialist/interview adviser, etc.) and who will operate the equipment;

- the location of the interview;
- the timing of the interview;
- the duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session); and
- what is likely to happen after the interview.

Aims and objectives

2.75 Setting clear aims and objectives is important because they give direction to the interview and contribute to its structure. The interview aims and objectives should focus on trying to establish what happened prior to, during and after the alleged event(s), including the details of all the physical and verbal interactions that took place between the child and the alleged perpetrator(s) and between the child and anybody else. The interview aims and objectives should also take account of any suspected attempt to stop the child from talking to the police or any other agency or person.

Techniques

2.76 The kind of techniques used within the phased structure set out in Part 2B will vary according to what is known about both the child and the offence when planning the interview, as well as how the child behaves and what emerges during the interview itself. For example, it might be productive to make use of some of the cognitive procedures referred to in paragraphs 2.192 to 2.195 within the phased interview approach with a direct witness who is able and willing to participate in the process, whereas such techniques are unlikely to be productive while a witness remains less co-operative and hostile and a more managed communication is necessary.

How the interview is to be recorded

2.77 Section 21 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 distinguishes three categories of child witness:

- (i) children giving evidence in sexual offence cases;
- (ii) children giving evidence in cases involving an offence of violence, abduction or neglect; and
- (iii) children giving evidence in all other cases.

Video-recorded interviews should take place in all category (i) and (ii) child witness cases, unless the child objects and/or there are insurmountable difficulties which prevent the recording taking place (e.g. if the child has been involved in abuse involving video-recording or photography).

2.78 In all other cases (category (iii) above), the decision whether or not to video-record an interview should take into account:

- > the needs and circumstances of the child (e.g. age, development, impairments, degree of trauma experienced, whether the child is now in a safe environment);

- > whether the measure is likely to maximise the quality of that particular child's evidence;
- > the type and severity of offence;
- > the circumstances of the offence (e.g. relationship of the child to the alleged abuser);
- > the child's state of mind (e.g. likely distress and/or shock); and
- > perceived fears about intimidation and recrimination.

2.79 Given the variety of children's backgrounds and the different circumstances leading to suspicion of abuse, there are no hard and fast rules or unequivocal criteria that apply to the video-recording of interviews. Among the considerations to be taken into account before proceeding with any video-recorded interview with a child are the following:

- > the individual child's circumstances; current or previous contact with public services; previous concerns around parenting, neglect or abuse; and history of the current allegation;
- > the purpose and likely value of a video-recorded interview on this occasion;
- > competency, compellability and availability of the child for cross-examination;
- > the child's ability and willingness to talk in a formal interview setting;
- > the use of an intermediary and/or aids to communication (interviews involving intermediaries and/or aids to communication should be video-recorded unless the child does not consent or there are exceptional circumstances for not doing so); and
- > preparation of the child before interview.

2.80 Discussions at the planning stage about category (iii) cases will thus enable the investigating team to decide whether a video-recorded interview or an interview for the purposes of taking a written statement is appropriate for any particular individual. It is likely that a video-recorded interview will be considered if a child has already made a clear allegation of abuse or if someone has witnessed the child being abused. A video-recorded interview may also be appropriate, subject to the deliberations of the investigating team, if the child is emotionally distressed or has a psychiatric disorder. Where the child has made no verbal allegation of abuse, then the interviewing team may decide that other specialist help or assessment of the child is more appropriate to the needs of the child than a video-recorded interview.

2.81 Regardless of how the interview is recorded, notes should always be taken which are sufficiently detailed to assist the investigating officer to determine any further lines of enquiry that might be necessary and to brief the custody officer and any other interviewers where a suspected perpetrator is in custody. Responsibility for the compilation of such notes should be agreed during the planning phase of the interview. This responsibility should fall to the interview monitor, where they are in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment, or to the recording equipment operator. While interviewers should consider taking brief notes to assist them during the free narrative phase of the interview where appropriate, they should not be responsible for taking notes for the purposes of briefing others because it is likely to distract the witness, obstruct the flow of recall and slow the interview process down, thus hindering the maximum retrieval of information.

Interviewers and others present at the interview

The interviewer

2.82 Consideration should be given to who is best qualified to lead the interview. A special blend of skills is required to take the lead in video-recorded interviews. The lead interviewer should be a person who has or is likely to be able to establish rapport with the child, who understands how to communicate effectively with interviewees who might become distressed and who has a proper grasp of the rules of evidence and criminal offences. The lead interviewer must have good knowledge of information important to the investigation (see paragraphs 2.56 to 2.59 above), including the points needed to prove particular offences, and must be prepared to testify about the interview in court if called upon to do so.

2.83 In addition to taking account of the prospective interviewer's skills, the following factors should be taken into consideration when considering who should conduct the interview:

- > the experience of the prospective interviewer in talking to children in respect of the type of offence under investigation and any other skills that they possess that could be useful;
- > any personal or domestic issues that the prospective interviewer has that might have an adverse impact on the interview; and
- > whether any previous experience that the prospective interviewer has with the child is likely to either inhibit rapport building or give rise to challenges of coaching, prompting or offering inducements.

2.84 The child's gender, race, culture and ethnicity must always be given due consideration and advice sought where necessary, but stereotypic conclusions about who is to conduct the interview should be avoided. Where the child expresses a preference for an interviewer of a particular gender or sexual orientation, or from a particular race, cultural or ethnic background, this should be accommodated as far as is practical in the circumstances.

2.85 The interviewer should consider the appropriate mode of dress for the particular interviewee. For example, research shows that a person's perceived authority can have an adverse effect on the interviewee, especially with respect to suggestibility.

2.86 Exceptionally, it may be in the interests of the child to be interviewed by an adult in whom they have already put confidence but who is not a member of the investigating team. Provided that such a person has appropriate professional qualifications, is independent and impartial, is not a party to the proceedings, is prepared to co-operate with appropriately trained interviewers and can accept adequate briefing (including permitted questioning techniques), this possibility should not be precluded.

The interview monitor

2.87 The presence of an interview monitor is desirable because they can help to ensure that the interview is conducted in a professional manner, can assist in identifying any gaps that emerge in the child's account, and can ensure that the child's needs are kept paramount. Careful consideration needs to be given to whether the interview monitor is present in the interview room itself (in the event of which they might effectively be regarded as being a 'second interviewer'), or in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment (in which case they might effectively be regarded as an 'observer'). The possibility that the child might feel intimidated by the presence of too many people in the interview room should be taken into account in determining where an interview monitor is situated, particularly if an interview supporter and interpreter are also to be present in the interview room.

2.88 Regardless of who takes the lead, the interviewing team should have a clear and shared remit for the role of the interview monitor. Too often this role is subjugated to the need for someone to operate the video equipment, when, in reality, the interview monitor has a vital role in observing the lead interviewer's questioning and the child's demeanour. The interview monitor should be alert to interviewer errors and apparent confusion in communication between the lead interviewer and the child. The interview monitor can reflect back to the planning discussions and communicate with the lead interviewer as necessary. Such observation and monitoring can be essential to the overall clarity and completeness of the video-recorded account, which will be especially important at court.

Equipment operators

2.89 The equipment should always have an operator for the duration of the interview. This will allow the view recorded by the camera to be adjusted if the child moves. It should also provide an opportunity for the interviewer to be alerted at the earliest possible moment in the event of an equipment failure, rather than such a failure not being discovered until the end of the interview (see also Appendix H).

Interpreters

2.90 A child should always be interviewed in the language of their choice, unless exceptional circumstances prevail (e.g. with regard to the availability of interpreters). This will normally be the child's first language, unless specific circumstances result in the child's second language being more appropriate. Interviewers should be aware that some children will be perfectly fluent in English, but will use their family language for intimate parts of the body, for example. Preparation needs to take account of this. If the child is bilingual, then this may require the use of an interpreter. Some children might have very strong views on the preferred gender or ethnicity of interpreters, and these should be accommodated wherever possible.

2.91 Interpreters should be appropriately accredited and trained so that they understand the need to avoid altering the meaning of questions and replies. They should normally be selected from the National Register of Public Service Interpreters or the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People's (CACDP's) National Directory of Sign Language Interpreters. If it is not possible to select an interpreter from these registers then the interpreter may be chosen from some other list, provided that the interpreter meets standards at least equal to those required for entry onto the aforementioned registers, in terms of academic qualifications and proven experience of interpreting within the criminal justice system. While the familiarity of the interpreter to the child is not a bar to employment and may indeed facilitate communication, all interpreters need to be independent, impartial and unbiased. Family members or other close relatives should not be employed.

2.92 Interpreters should be involved in the planning process. They should have a clear understanding of the objectives of the interview, its structure and the function served by any specific techniques used (e.g. those of the cognitive interview). It should be remembered that some words in English might not have an exact equivalent in other languages and communication systems. This possibility should, therefore, be discussed while planning the interview, with a view to developing strategies to address what might otherwise be a problem.

2.93 If interviewers are working with an interpreter, it is important to have clarified at the outset who will lead the interview in terms of maintaining direct communication with the child. If the child is communicating via an interpreter, the lead interviewer should identify themselves as such while maintaining appropriate eye contact with the child, so that the child understands that they should address the interviewer, not the interpreter. If, however, a signer is being used to communicate with a child who has a hearing impairment, it may be more important for the signer to maintain the direct communication with the child.

2.94 Where an interpreter is present, they must be clearly identified at the beginning of the interview. Whenever possible, they should also be visible in one of the shots recorded.

2.95 Where a signer is being used to communicate with a child with a hearing impairment, a camera should be used to record the signer's hand movements as well as those of the child. In some interview suites, it might be necessary to make use of a portable camera, in addition to the static equipment already set up in the suite, for this purpose.

Intermediaries

2.96 The information provided here is intended to summarise the role of the intermediary and general principles that need to be considered in criminal investigations. Detailed procedural guidance and a case checklist can be found in the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005). While the services of an intermediary are likely to be particularly helpful where the child is very young, is traumatised or uses a specialised system of communication, it is important to note that an intermediary may be able to help improve the quality of evidence of a child of any age who is unable to detect and cope with misunderstanding or to clearly express their answers to questions, especially in the context of an interview or while giving evidence in court.

2.97 Even though Section 29 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 makes it clear that an intermediary can assist a witness to communicate by explaining questions put to and answers given by a vulnerable witness, this rarely happens in practice. It is more common for intermediaries to assist during the planning phase of an interview by providing advice on how questions should be asked and then to intervene during the interview where miscommunication is likely by assisting the interviewer to rephrase the question or by repeating the witness's answers where they might otherwise be inaudible or unclear on the recording. The extent to which the intermediary is actively involved in the communication of questions and answers will vary from witness to witness depending on the witness's particular needs and communication style. It will also depend on the degree of compliance with the intermediary's recommendations by the interviewer. It is very important to remember that the intermediary is there only to assist communication and understanding – they are not allowed to take on the function of investigator.

2.98 An Intermediary Registration Board (IRB) has been established by the Office for Criminal Justice Reform (OCJR). The IRB oversees registration of intermediaries and their standards. Registered Intermediaries are accredited by the IRB and the OCJR following a selection and training process assessed against a set of core competencies required for the intermediary role. Registered Intermediaries are checked periodically at the Criminal Records Bureau enhanced disclosure level. Details of how to access the intermediary register are set out in the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005).

2.99 Before an intermediary can assist with communication they need to conduct one or more assessment meetings with the witness. The criminal case is not discussed during assessment meetings. These meetings enable the intermediary to consider the witness's communication needs and devise strategies and recommendations for how to maximise understanding. The meetings also enable the intermediary to build the necessary rapport with the witness and to determine whether they (the intermediary) are the right person to act as an intermediary for that witness. Intermediaries should never be alone with a witness; a responsible third party, as defined by procedural guidelines (Section 2 of the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005)) must be present. This should usually be a police officer at the investigation stage.

2.100 Registered Intermediaries should be used. The use of an unregistered person as an intermediary can only be considered once the options for using a Registered Intermediary have been exhausted. When this is the case, an unregistered intermediary has the same responsibility to the court. They must be independent of the case being investigated (i.e. not witnesses or suspects). There is a preference for unregistered intermediaries to be professional people rather than family members, friends or associates. In the event that the particular circumstances of the case are such that it appears that only a non-professional person can perform the function of an intermediary, it is important that the witness is assessed by a Registered Intermediary before proceeding in order to confirm that the role can only be performed by the non-professional. A briefing pack to be used by unregistered intermediaries setting out the role of an intermediary is available from the OCJR.

2.101 Discussions with the intermediary at the planning stage should include the arrangements for leading the interview, legal and confidentiality requirements, and the exact role that the intermediary will take. The potentially explicit nature of the topics to be covered should be addressed. The intermediary should be provided with information that is relevant to their role and will help them to maximise communication/understanding (e.g. the specific vocabulary used by the witness and relevant relationships).

Interviewer supporters

2.102 Deliberations at the planning stage might lead to a decision to include a support person in the interview (termed an 'interview supporter' – see also Chapter 5 for the role of the pre-trial and court witness supporter). Although it is important to guard against undue influence of the child by another adult, it may be helpful to the child (and to the process of securing an account) if someone is present to offer support, especially if the child is very young or upset. It is possible that such a person could withdraw once rapport has been established and the child has settled. Parent(s)/carer(s) should not be automatically excluded from this role, but their appropriateness will very much depend on the circumstances and nature of the case, together with any issues arising from the allegations made by the child. There are also good reasons why their presence may not be in the best interests of the child (see paragraph 2.104). Having a parent or carer close by in another room may be sufficient. Other possibilities might include a teacher, nursery helper or other family member.

2.103 The supporter must be clearly instructed not to participate in the interview itself, whether by instructing or correcting the child, answering the interviewer's questions, head nodding or facial expressions. It may be helpful for the interview supporter to refer to the guidance in the Young Witness Pack (NSPCC, 1998). Interview supporters should never offer the child inducements such as a toy or trip in return for general co-operation or answering particular questions. Persons involved as witnesses in the case in any capacity (i.e. not just someone who has seen the incident in question) cannot take on the role of witness supporter. This includes a parent to whom the child first disclosed abuse, or a parent whose partner or former partner is the subject of the allegation of abuse. It is important to ensure that the interview supporter has not been involved in the alleged offence, nor will be perceived by the child as being involved (this may be particularly relevant to parent(s) acting as supporters). Carers can, however, wait in an adjacent room if it is thought that physical proximity might be helpful to the child.

2.104 Research suggests that the presence of a carer or parent at the time of the interview can actually be an additional source of stress if the child is concerned about them hearing unpleasant details. Also, the child might feel uncomfortable about someone they see on a daily basis, or in a particular relationship (e.g. their teacher), knowing intimate details of their personal life. For this reason, interviewers are strongly advised, wherever possible, to seek the views of the child on interview support as part of the planning for the interview. The interviewer needs to explain all the options for support and make it very clear that the child has a real choice and that whatever they choose is acceptable. Some children might agree for their parent or carer to be present just to please the interviewer or parent.

2.105 Any interview supporter(s) must be clearly identified at the beginning of the video-recorded interview. Whenever possible, they should also be visible in one of the shots recorded. Best practice is for the supporter to make sure they are outside the child's line of vision (e.g. by sitting behind the child). The interview supporter should consider carefully how they could best comfort the particular child, should they become distressed. The child should be reassured, but it may not be appropriate to touch the child physically, as this might be perceived as an invasion of personal space or even as abusive by some children.

Location of the interview

2.106 Active consideration should be given to the location of the interview and the layout of the room in which it is to take place. The location should be quiet enough to avoid a situation in which background noise is likely to interfere with the quality of the sound on any visual or audio record, and should be free from interruptions, distractions, and fear and intimidation, so that the interviewer and the child can concentrate fully on the task in hand: the interview. The interviewer should ensure that sufficient pens and paper are available for use where a child's recall could be assisted by drawing a sketch plan.

2.107 Where the interview is conducted in a purpose-built interview suite (preferred option), the room decor should be welcoming and friendly (e.g. pictures on the wall which will appeal to children and young people of all ages, races and cultures, and indicate that other children visit the interview suite). Appendix H provides guidance on the selection and placement of furniture in the interview room. Food and drinks provided for comfort breaks should be appropriate for children from different ethnic groups.

2.108 Toys and other play materials should be located out of immediate view of the child, so that any not introduced by the interviewer do not act as a distraction to the child during the interview. A limited range of gender- and age-appropriate playthings should be available. Suitable items are likely to include pens/crayons and paper. Dolls, puppets, puzzles and toys could also be considered where they appear likely to make the child's experience more positive (e.g. in rapport) and/or help the child to give their account more effectively. Interviewers should be alert to the possibility that toys will distract a restless or young child, or possibly patronise an older child.

2.109 In the event of it being necessary to interview a child at their home address, care should be taken to avoid saying anything or visually recording any background material that might lead to the location being identified (the use of background screens should be considered if necessary).

Timing of the interview

2.110 The investigating team should pay particular attention to when the interview takes place, as research has shown this to be one of the main concerns of child witnesses. Although the interview will normally take place as soon after an allegation or referral emerges as is practicable, rushing to conduct an interview without properly considering the child's needs and consulting them as far as possible and without proper planning can undo any of the benefits of obtaining an early account from the child. The child's normal daytime routine and general needs should be considered, as well as those of the adult(s) who care for the child. Interviewers should avoid starting an interview just before a mealtime or bedtime (or at any other time when the child is likely to be suffering from the effects of fatigue).

2.111 The decision about when to conduct an interview should also take account of the potential effects of trauma and/or stress. Trauma and stress can interfere with the process of recall, but this should be determined by asking the child rather than by the imposition of an arbitrary period of time. Some child witnesses will want to be interviewed relatively quickly while others might wish to be interviewed at a later date. It should always be borne in mind that the potential for memory contamination taking place increases with the delay.

2.112 Children are very sensitive to being taken out of school classes, and on the rare occasions when it is unavoidable, the interviewer should liaise with the child's teachers to ensure it is effected as discreetly as possible.

Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)

2.113 The interviewing team should anticipate the likely number and length of the video-recorded interview(s) as part of the planning process. It will help both the interviewer and the child to have an idea of approximately how long each interview is likely to last.

2.114 The pace of the interview should be dictated by the age and circumstances of the individual child. Interviews should proceed at the pace of the child, not at that of the interviewer. Professionals whose experience of interviewing has been mostly with adults may be tempted to adopt too fast a pace for the child, while those with only childcare experience may adopt an overcautious approach and spend too long in the rapport phase, when the child is ready to proceed with their account. Whenever possible, the interviewer should seek advice from people who know the child about the likely length of time that they can be interviewed and whether a pause or break is desirable.

2.115 The interviewer should allow comfort breaks during the interview for refreshment, use of the toilet or to have a break from the task if this is requested or felt necessary. The reason for any breaks should always be explained by the interviewer on the video-recording. Where comfort breaks are necessary to enable the child to go to the toilet, the child should always be accompanied by one of the interviewers and discouraged from talking to others. If interactions with others do occur, they should be fully documented. When a break is less than 15 minutes, the recording should be allowed to run; if a break exceeds 15 minutes, then a new analogue tape or digital disk should be used. At no time should breaks or refreshments appear to be offered as a reward for co-operation or withheld from the child in the absence of co-operation with the interviewer or making a disclosure.

2.116 The absolute length of the interview will depend on a range of factors, including:

- > the developmental age of the child;
- > the number of alleged incidents to be described;
- > how forthcoming the child is; and
- > how much time is required to establish rapport.

It is not possible or desirable to put forward an ideal duration for an interview. However, shorter times may be necessary for developmentally younger children with limited attention spans, while older children may be comfortable with an interview that lasts longer. If a child is becoming distressed or if their attention is beginning to wander, then a break may be advisable. If the distress continues, then the interview should be curtailed at that point and resumed, if possible, on a later occasion. Interviewers should not persist in interviewing a reluctant child: not only is this damaging to the child, but such interviews are unlikely to be accepted by the courts.

2.117 In some circumstances it might be necessary to conduct the interview over more than one session (e.g. in complicated cases, where allegations of multiple offences are involved or where the child has a short attention span), and the interviewer must plan appropriately for each interview/session, in a focused way that is differentiated from the strategic planning of the overall investigation. It is not appropriate to neglect such planning or to leave preparation for the interview itself to the last minute. These sessions might be separated by a matter of hours or, if necessary, could take place over a number of days. When this occurs, care must be taken to avoid repetition of the same focused questions over time, because these could lead to unreliable or inconsistent responses from some children and interviews thus being ruled inadmissible by the courts.

Planning for immediately after the interview

2.118 Although the interviewer cannot predict the course of an interview, planning discussions should cover the possible outcomes and consider the implications for the child and family, taking account of knowledge about the child's circumstances and previous or current involvement with social care or other public services. Research has shown that children and their carers are often left unsupported subsequent to an interview (especially if the alleged abuser is outside the immediate family), which can be a source of great stress. The interviewing team itself is unlikely to be responsible for the child and family's continuing support needs; nevertheless, early consideration by the wider professional team may alleviate some of the child's and carers' anxieties.

For instance, various outcomes of the video interview can be anticipated:

- > Interviewers are satisfied that something untoward has happened to the child, for example a clear disclosure is obtained or other forensic evidence is available.
- > Interviewers are satisfied that nothing untoward has happened to the child.
- > Interviewers remain uncertain as to whether anything has happened to the child or not.

Planning should anticipate these various eventualities. Where a child is a witness but not the victim of an alleged crime, different sets of outcomes exist, and these too should be considered at the planning stage.

2.119 For each possible outcome, the interviewer should prepare explanations of what may happen next for the child and their carer(s). Answers can be prepared to commonly asked questions such as 'What is the likelihood of a prosecution?' and 'Will [perpetrator] go to prison?' A contact person should be identified to whom the child and carer(s) can subsequently direct any queries or further information.

2.120 It must be remembered that non-disclosure of abuse is an acceptable outcome of an interview, either because the child has not experienced or witnessed any maltreatment or because the child was not ready, able or willing to tell at the time of the interview. Differences in how and when children disclose abuse are described in Box 2.8.

Box 2.8: How and when children talk about abuse

- > Statements may be 'accidental' or deliberate, verbal or non-verbal.
- > Suspicion may arise from one or more sources: medical query, witness reports, confession, photographic evidence, children's behaviour or verbal statements.
- > Children may not report all the details of their abuse at once – they may minimise or withhold information.
- > Disclosure may be immediate, but is very often delayed for long periods.
- > Children may deny or retract such statements, even if other evidence exists, and this may be symptomatic of the abuse itself.
- > The presence of an earlier informal statement does not guarantee an allegation will be repeated in a formal interview.
- > Age, culture and many other factors may affect children's willingness and ability to make such statements.

Child witnesses who might become suspects

2.121 So far as is practicable, consideration should be given in the planning stage as to how the interviewer will deal with any confessions to criminal offences made by the child in the course of the interview. Any decision on an appropriate course of action will involve taking into account the seriousness of the crime admitted and weighing it against the seriousness of the crime under investigation.

2.122 It is preferable to anticipate and plan for such an eventuality while recognising that any decisions on a particular course of action are likely to depend upon what has been disclosed by the child during the course of the interview (see paragraphs 2.226 to 2.229 in Part 2B for guidance in respect of incriminating statements made by child witnesses during interviews).

Recording the planning process

2.123 A full written record should be kept of the decisions made during the planning process and of the information and rationale underpinning them. This record should be referred to in the body of the Section 9 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement subsequently made by the interviewer in relation to the planning, preparation and conduct of the interview and should be revealed to the CPS under the requirements of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996.

Victim Personal Statements

2.124 Interviewers should plan to give children who are victims the opportunity to make a Victim Personal Statement (VPS) at the end of the interview. The purpose of a VPS is to give a victim of crime the chance to say what effect the crime has had on them and to help identify their need for information and support. It may also provide additional information, from the victim's perspective, which will be helpful to the criminal justice agencies subsequently dealing with the case. Victims can have a supporter present while they make a VPS if they wish to do so. Details of the scheme are set out in Guidance on the Victim Personal Statement Scheme, issued on 14 August 2001 in Home Office Circular No. 35/2001 (Home Office, 2001).

2.125 Child witnesses who are victims should be given the opportunity to make a VPS after completing either a video-recorded interview or a written statement. In such cases, the VPS should be given in the same format as their witness statement; that is, where the evidential witness statement is video-recorded, the VPS should also be video-recorded.

2.126 Providing a VPS (video-recorded or written) is entirely voluntary. Child witnesses and their parents/carers should be provided with an age-appropriate explanation about what a VPS is and how it can/cannot be used, to help them to make an informed choice as to whether they provide it or not. In the first instance, young witnesses should be given the opportunity to make the VPS themselves, but in some circumstances it may be appropriate for the parent/carer to provide the VPS on the victim's behalf. In some cases it may be necessary to take a VPS from the victim and the parent/carer, in order to establish a full picture of the impact of their experience.

2.127 Young witnesses over 16 years of age are able to consent to making a VPS. In the case of very young and young children or those with a learning disability, the interviewer should consider consulting the parent/carer as to whether the child or the parent/carer or both should make the VPS. Children have the right to privacy, including the right to choose to provide information that they do not wish to share with their parent/carer. Thus, while children should be invited to make a VPS, account needs to be taken of their age and ability to understand when considering whether the parent/carer also needs to be consulted. The same considerations apply in relation to seeking further information from the parent/carer after the older child has made their own VPS.

2.128 In cases where the witness statement has been taken in the form of a video-recorded interview, it is preferable for the VPS to follow on the same recording, but there must be a clear break between the two. This can be achieved by dividing the two statements with a still image (e.g. the police force logo). Alternatively, or in addition, the interviewer may make a statement on the recording, acknowledging the change from the evidential interview to the VPS.

2.129 There is always the possibility that at a later time the victim or their parent/carer may feel that the impact of the experience has been such that a second statement is needed. Unless there are exceptional circumstances, a second statement should be taken in a written format in line with Guidance on the Victim Personal Statement Scheme, issued on 14 August 2001 in Home Office Circular No. 35/2001 (Home Office, 2001).

Part 2B: Interviewing child witnesses

Aims

By the end of Part 2B, the interviewer should have knowledge of:

- > the four main phases of the video-recorded interview and the functions of each (paragraphs 2.130 to 2.132);
- > the importance of ground rules and truth and lies (paragraphs 2.142 and 2.143);
- > how to elicit and support a free narrative account (paragraphs 2.147 to 2.152);
- > the strengths and weaknesses of different types of question (paragraphs 2.154 to 2.174);
- > guidance on misleading statements (paragraphs 2.177 and 2.178);
- > closing the interview (paragraphs 2.179 to 2.182);
- > evaluating the interview (paragraphs 2.183 to 2.185);
- > further interviews (paragraph 2.188);
- > the cognitive interview (paragraphs 2.192 to 2.195);
- > special interviewing techniques and the use of props (paragraphs 2.196 to 2.201);
- > considerations when interviewing children with disabilities or very young children (paragraphs 2.202 to 2.225); and
- > what to do if the child makes a self-incriminating statement (paragraphs 2.226 to 2.229).

General principles

2.130 The basic goal of an interview with a witness of any age is to obtain an accurate and truthful account in a way which is fair, is in the witness's interests and is acceptable to the court. What follows is a recommended procedure for interviewing a child which is based on a phased approach. Much professional experience and published research now exist on the conduct of the phased interview with children and have found that it produces a good balance between quality and quantity of information elicited from an interviewee. The phased interview normally consists of the following four phases:

- > establishing rapport;
- > asking for free narrative recall;
- > asking questions; and
- > closure.

Each phase will be described in greater detail below. These phases are compatible with and underpin the PEACE (Planning and Preparation; Engage and Explain; Account, Clarification and Challenge; Closure; Evaluation) interview framework advocated by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO).

2.131 The phased approach acknowledges that all interviews contain a social as well as a cognitive element. As regards the social element, witnesses, especially the young and the vulnerable, will only divulge information to persons with whom they feel at ease and whom they trust. Hence the first stage of any interview involves establishing rapport with the witness, and the final or closure phase requires the interviewer to try to ensure that the witness leaves the interview feeling that they have been given the fullest opportunity to be heard. As regards the cognitive element, the phased interview attempts to elicit evidence from the witness in a way which is compatible with what is known about the way human memory operates and the way it develops through childhood. A variety of interviewing techniques are deployed, proceeding from free narrative to open and then specific-closed questions, where a hierarchy of reliability of the information is obtained. The technique is designed to ensure that, as far as possible, witnesses of all ages provide their own account, rather than the interviewer putting suggestions to them with which they are invited to agree. The techniques of the phased interview are not those of casual conversation: they must be learned and then practised to ensure that they are applied consistently and correctly.

2.132 The emphasis on the phased approach should not be taken to imply that all other interview techniques are necessarily unacceptable or preclude their development. Nor should what follows be thought of as a checklist that must be rigidly adhered to: every interview is a unique event, which requires the interviewer to adapt procedures to the developmental age and temperament of the child and the nature of the alleged offence(s). Flexibility is the key to skilful interviewing. A good interviewer is someone who can adapt their interviewing style in accordance with the interviewee sitting in front of them. However, the sound legal framework provided by the principles of the phased interview should not readily be departed from by the interviewer unless they have fully discussed and agreed the reasons with their senior manager or an interview adviser (tier 5 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)). It may subsequently be necessary to explain such deviations at court.

Preliminaries

2.133 The investigating team will first have to decide whether a video interview is appropriate or whether, in the circumstances of the investigation, the option of a written statement is preferable. The police may wish to hold an early meeting with CPS at this point, if such a meeting has not already taken place. The decision will be based on the nature and circumstances of the alleged offence and the age and preference of the child (see Chapter 5). If a video-recorded interview is the preferred option, then normally one person, the lead interviewer, will be responsible for interviewing the child. An interview monitor may be present, in the room or outside (see paragraphs 2.87 and 2.88). In addition, it may also be appropriate for the child to have an interview supporter (see paragraphs 2.102 to 2.105).

2.134 The interviewing team will have decided at the planning meeting who will be the lead interviewer, taking into account any strong gender or ethnic preferences expressed by the child. It is essential that the interviewing team allows sufficient time prior to the interview to check that all equipment is working satisfactorily. To have to stop and restart the interview places additional stress on the child. Decisions should also be taken about where the child and interviewer will be placed so as to ensure that they are within clear view of the cameras. For the benefit of the court, the interviewer should begin an interview by:

- > introducing all those present to the child, using the name by which the child prefers to be known;
- > explaining in terminology appropriate to the developmental age of the child the role and function of police officers and/or children's social care workers involved in the investigation;
- > announcing where the interview is taking place and the time and date of the interview; and
- > pointing out the presence and location of cameras in the room and their function as a permanent record of the interview.

2.135 Research confirms that many children believe that being interviewed by the police is an indication of their wrongdoing, and any misperceptions need to be corrected at this early stage. The type of explanation offered for the purpose of the interview will vary with the developmental age of the child. Younger children may be told that other people need to view what they have to say in order for them to decide how best to help them if they have any problems. Older children can be reassured that making a recording of the interview will result in fewer requests to repeat their account to others.

Phase one: establishing rapport (including engaging and explaining)

Explaining the formalities

2.136 Firstly, it is necessary when video-recording the interview to check that the equipment is turned on and that all of the people in the room can be clearly seen on the monitor through the camera with the wide-angle lens where two cameras are in use (see Appendix H). Next, the interviewer should say out loud the day, date, time and place (not the detailed address) of the interview and give the relevant details of all those present.

Building rapport

2.137 All interviews should have a rapport phase, where relationships are established between the child and the interviewing team and, towards the end of this phase, the aims and conventions of the interview are explained. Some interviewers prefer to deal with elements of rapport in the interview preparation phase (ground rules, reassurance). If so, such procedures need to be properly documented and reiterated during rapport. More formally, the rapport phase should normally encompass the following:

- > initially discussing neutral topics and, where appropriate, playing with toys and reassuring the child that they have done nothing wrong;
- > explaining the ground rules;
- > exploring the child's understanding of truth and lies and establishing the purpose of the interview; and
- > supplementing the interviewer's knowledge of the child's social, emotional and cognitive development.

2.138 Most children will be anxious prior to an investigative interview, and few will be familiar with the formal aspects of this procedure. It is therefore important that the interviewer uses the rapport period to build up trust and mutual understanding with the child and to help them to relax as far as possible in the novel environment. Remember, children are often taught not to talk to strangers. In addition, research has shown that anxiety hinders the reporting of detailed information. Initial discussions should focus on events and interests not thematically related to the investigation: sport, television programmes, favourite games, school curriculum, the journey to the interview suite, and so on. Sometimes, where the child and the interviewer have had some previous contact, this aspect of the rapport phase can be quite brief. At other times, especially when the child is nervous or has been subject to threats from the alleged abuser, a much longer period of the rapport phase may be warranted.

2.139 Rapport also gives the interviewer the opportunity to build on their knowledge of the child which they will have gathered from the planning meeting. In particular they will learn more about the child's communication skills and degree of understanding of vocabulary. The interviewer can then adjust their language use and the complexity of their questions in the light of the child's responses. Research has shown that recall is hindered if adult-appropriate (as opposed to age-appropriate) language is used.

2.140 Rapport also serves to set the tone for the style of questions to be used by the interviewer for the main part of the interview. It is important that the child be encouraged in the rapport phase to talk freely through the extensive use of open-ended questions (see paragraphs 2.160 to 2.163). A stream of questions that the child can answer 'yes' or 'no' to or make an equally brief response should be avoided. This not only helps the interviewer to assess the child's level of language, as the child should be talking at length relative to answering more specific-closed questions, but also teaches the child to talk (i.e. give detailed accounts). An interview is a learning experience even from the outset of the interview.

2.141 In some instances, it might be helpful to conduct a practice interview during the rapport phase of the interview during which the child is asked to recall a personal event unrelated to the issue of concern (e.g. a birthday celebration or a holiday treat). This serves to provide the child with an example of the kind of detail that will be required in relation to the issue of concern and to practise extended verbal responses. Such practice interviews might be particularly useful with younger witnesses who do not appreciate the demands of a witness interview for detailed and context information.

Ground rules

2.142 Children, especially young children, will perceive interviewers as figures of authority. Research suggests that when such authority figures ask questions, however misinformed, some children will endeavour to provide answers. Likewise, when authority figures offer interpretations of events or actions, however misleading, some children will agree with them and even elaborate upon them in an effort to please the interviewer. It is necessary for the interviewer not to overemphasise their authority in relation to the child. They should also use the rapport phase actively to combat any tendency towards answers from the child which reflect an eagerness to please. This can be done by stating explicitly at the outset that:

- > the interviewer was not present when the events under investigation allegedly took place and that therefore they are relying on the child's account;
- > if the interviewer asks a question that the child doesn't understand, the child should feel free to say so;
- > if the interviewer asks a question to which the child does not know the answer, the child should say, 'I don't know'; and
- > if the interviewer misunderstands what the child has said or summarises incorrectly what has been said, then the child should point this out.

These points are best put across in the context of concrete examples. It is recommended that the interviewer gives the child the chance to practise saying 'I don't know' or 'I don't understand' (see Box 2.9 for sample material).

Box 2.9: Establishing the ground rules for the interview

'Today, I am going to be asking you to tell me about things that have happened to you. Now, I wasn't there when these things happened so I need you to help me understand everything. Have I explained that properly?'

[Pause]

'One of the rules for me today is that I listen hard and try to understand everything you tell me. So, I might have to ask you some questions later. But, it's not like school – you know if the teacher asks you a question and you say you don't know – what does your teacher say to you?'

[Child's response, e.g. 'Miss Jackson tells you off, but Miss Smith is okay', or 'I have to try and answer', or 'I have to guess the answer.']

'Well, today, it's really okay for you to say you don't know. Because I'm a grown up, I might also ask you a question that you don't understand. I'll try hard not to, but if I do, I want you to tell me, so that I can try and put it another way.'

[Pause]

'And the last rule on me is if I get something wrong, I need you to tell me to make sure I get it right.'

After Robinson Howes (2000).

Truth and lies

2.143 Toward the end of the rapport phase, when ground rules have been explained to the child, the interviewer should advise the witness to give a truthful and accurate account of any incident they describe. There is no legal requirement to administer the oath or admonish the child, but since the video may be used as evidence in court, it is helpful to the court to know that the child was made aware of the importance of telling the truth. This should be done in the rapport phase and not later in the interview because this might run the risk of the child concluding that the interviewer had not believed what they had said up to that point. It is inadvisable to ask children to provide general definitions of what is the truth or a lie (a task that would tax an adult); rather, they should be asked to judge from examples. The interviewer should use examples suitable to the child's age, experience and understanding. Secondary school-age children can be asked to give examples of truthful statements and lies, while younger children can be offered examples and be asked to say which are true and which are lies. It is important that the examples chosen really are lies, not merely incorrect statements: lies must include an intent to deceive another person. An example of one approach is shown in Box 2.10. Different examples are suggested for different ages of children. If a child shows a proper appreciation of the difference between truth and lies, it is important to conclude by emphasising the importance of being truthful and accurate in everything they say in the interview and the possible adverse consequences for another person of telling lies. How this is put across will again vary with the age of the child. If a child shows no proper appreciation of the distinction between truth and lies, then this may seriously jeopardise the evidential value of the interview.

Box 2.10: Exploring the difference between truth and lies

'Now [name], it is very important that you tell me the truth about things that have happened to you. So before we begin, I want to make sure you understand the difference between the truth and a lie.'

Example for younger children

'Let me tell you a story about John. John was playing with his ball in the kitchen and he hit the ball against the window. The window broke and John ran upstairs into his bedroom. John's mummy saw the broken window, and asked John if he had broken the window. John said, 'No mummy.'

'Did John tell a lie or the truth, or don't you know?'

[Pause]

[Child responds]

'What should he have said?'

[Pause]

[Child responds]

Example for older children

'So, for example, Tony was having a smoke in his bedroom, after his mum had told him not to. He heard his mum coming and hid the cigarette. His mum said 'Have you been smoking?' Tony said, 'No mum.'

'Did Tony tell a lie or the truth, or don't you know?'

[Pause]

[Child responds]

'What should he have said?'

[Pause]

[Child responds]

'Why do you think he said 'no mum?'

[Pause]

[Child responds]

Adapted from A. Williams and S. Ridgeway (2000).

Explaining the outline of the interview

2.144 The interviewer should provide an explanation of the outline of the interview appropriate to the child's age and abilities. Typically the outline will take the form of the interviewer asking the child to give a free narrative account of what they remember and follow this with a few questions in order to clarify what has been said. It should also be explained that the interviewer might take a few brief notes.

Establishing the purpose of the interview

2.145 The reason for the interview needs to be explained in a way that makes the focus of the interview clear but does not specify the nature of the offence: to do so would be regarded as unnecessarily leading. Where a child has made an explicit complaint against a named individual, and especially when this has been repeated in a pre-interview assessment (see paragraphs 2.47 to 2.52), it should be possible to raise the issue by referring to previous conversations. The law permits the interviewer to raise an earlier complaint by the child to a third party, though the substance of the complaint should not be raised by the interviewer. It is also important to stress that what the interviewer wants to discuss with the child is their memory of the incident(s) which gave rise to the complaint, not the complaint itself (i.e. what the child remembers about the incident, not what they remember telling someone else). The situation is less straightforward where the child has made no previous complaint, but where there are legitimate reasons for the interview (e.g. the results of medical examinations, allegations by a sibling or confessions by an alleged abuser).

2.146 The child should be given every opportunity to raise the issue spontaneously with the minimum of prompting (see Box 2.11 for examples of acceptable prompts). Where such prompts fail, the interviewer can initiate discussion of the particular groups from which they are drawn (home, school, etc.). If this too is unsuccessful then the interviewer can consider asking which persons among a given group the child likes or dislikes and their reasons. Again, on no account must the explicit allegation be raised directly with the child because this might jeopardise any legal proceedings and could lead to a false allegation.

Box 2.11: Raising issues of concern

'Tell me why you are here today.'

[If no response]

'If there is something troubling you, it is important for me to understand.'

[If no response]

'I heard you said something to your teacher/friend/mummy last week. Tell me what you talked about.'

[If no previous allegation]

'I heard that something may have been bothering you. Tell me everything you can about that.'

[If no response]

'As I told you, my job is to talk to children about things which may be troubling them. It is very important I understand what may be troubling you. Tell me why you think [carer] has brought you here today.'

[If no response]

'I heard that someone may have done something that wasn't right. Tell me everything you know about that. Everything you can remember.'

(Adapted from The NICHD Protocol for Investigative Interviews of Alleged Sex-abuse Victims by M.E. Lamb, K.J. Sternberg, P.W. Esplin, I. Hershkowitz and Y. Orbach (unpublished manuscript, NICHD, Maryland, 1999).

Phase two: initiating and supporting a free narrative account

2.147 If it is deemed appropriate, having established rapport, to continue with the interview, then the child should be asked to provide in their own words an account of the relevant event(s). The free narrative phase is the core of the interview and the most reliable source of accurate information. During this phase, the interviewer's role is that of a facilitator, not an interrogator. Every effort should be made to obtain information from the child that is spontaneous and free from the interviewer's influence.

2.148 The aim of the free narrative phase is to secure a full and comprehensive account from the child of the alleged incident, in the child's own words. The child should not at this stage be interrupted to ask for additional details or to clarify ambiguities: this can be done in the questioning phase. The free narrative phase should never be curtailed by jumping into questions too soon. Instead, the interviewer should adopt a posture of 'active listening': letting the child know that what they are saying has been heard by the interviewer. The interviewer can offer prompts and encouragement if the child's account falters. The use of affirmative responses 'ah huh', 'OK', and head nods helps to maintain the child's account. Interviewers should be careful to ensure that affirmative responses are provided throughout the interview and do not relate solely to those sections of the interview dealing with allegations. Reflecting back what the child has just said also assists in eliciting more information (e.g. Child: 'so we went round to his house...' [pause] Interviewer: 'I see, so you went round to his house...'). Such prompts should relate only to the child's account and should not include relevant information not so far provided by the child. Children vary in their speed of delivery and the child, not the interviewer, should dictate the pace of the interview.

2.149 In many interviews, particularly those relating to allegations of child sexual abuse, children may be reluctant to talk openly and freely about incidents. Sometimes this can be overcome simply by the interviewer offering reassurance, for example: 'I know this must be difficult for you. Is there anything I can do to make it easier?' It is quite in order for the interviewer to refer to a child by their first or preferred name, but the use of terms of endearment ('dear', 'sweetheart'), verbal reinforcement (telling the child they are 'doing really well') and physical contact between the interviewer and the child (hugging, holding a hand) are inappropriate. However, this should not preclude physical reassurance being offered by an interview supporter to a distressed child. Another cause of reticence could be that the child has been taught that the use of certain terms is 'rude' or otherwise improper. If the interviewer believes this to be a problem, they can tell the child:

'Perhaps you have been taught that you shouldn't say certain words. Don't worry, in this room you can use what words you like. We have heard all of these words before. It's all right to use them here.'

The interviewer should not assume that when the child uses a sexual term, they attach the same meaning to it as the interviewer. Any ambiguities can be clarified in the questioning phase.

2.150 Some children provide more information spontaneously than others. In general, developmentally younger children provide less free narrative than older children. This should not prevent the interviewer doing as much as possible to elicit a clear and full account from such children: bear in mind that research has consistently demonstrated that young children's accounts are the most likely to be tainted through inappropriate questioning. Pauses and silences may be tolerated by the interviewer, but need careful handling where a child has been traumatised. Too long a silence can be oppressive and conversational pace can be lost. Tolerance should also be extended to what might appear irrelevant or repetitious information. Prompting is quite in order provided it is neutral ('and then what happened?') and does not imply positive evaluation ('right', 'good'). The interviewer needs also to be aware of the danger of intentionally or unintentionally communicating approval or disapproval, through inflexions of the voice or facial expressions.

2.151 Sometimes reticence can reflect the fact that an abuser has told the child that what has occurred is a secret between them or has made physical threats against the child or their loved ones. Where this is suspected, an appeal to the child's wish to stop the abuse is often effective. The child can be asked directly whether they have been asked to keep a secret. If the child gives a positive indication, it is in order to say: 'So, you've been told to keep a secret. Tell me what would happen if you told me this secret.' The interviewer can then address or debunk the threat, stressing that: 'We need to know what the secret is so that we can try to help you.' Sometimes children will be happier communicating secret information through indirect means, such as using a toy telephone or writing down information on a piece of paper. If such methods are used, it is important that the interviewer refers to such devices on the recording and that any written material is properly preserved and documented.

2.152 If the child has said nothing at all relevant to the alleged offences, the interviewer should consider, in the light of the plans made for the interview and in consultation with the interview monitor, if present, whether to proceed with the next phase of the interview. Nothing untoward may have happened to the child or the child may be unwilling or reluctant to speak about these events at this time. The needs of the child and of justice should both be considered. It may be necessary and proper to proceed to the closure phase if nothing of significance has emerged from free narrative or if a satisfactory, verifiable explanation has emerged for the original cause for concern.

Phase three: questioning

Prior to the questioning phase of the interview

2.153 Prior to entering the questioning phase of the interview it may be beneficial to reiterate some of the ground rules noted at the start of the interview. This is especially the case if the child has given a long free narrative account and/or there has been a break in the interview. In particular, consideration should be given to stating explicitly that:

- > the interviewer was not present when the events under investigation allegedly took place and that therefore they are relying on the child's account;
- > if the interviewer asks a question that the child doesn't understand, the child should feel free to say so;
- > if the interviewer asks a question that to which the child does not know the answer, the child should say, 'I don't know'; and

- > if the interviewer misunderstands what the child has said or summarises incorrectly what has been said, then the child should point this out.

Style of questions

2.154 Children vary in how much relevant information they provide in free narrative. However, in nearly all cases it will be necessary to expand on the child's initial account through questions. It is important that the interviewer asks only one question at a time, and allows the child sufficient time to complete their answer before asking a further question. Patience is always required when asking questions, particularly with developmentally younger children; they will need time to respond. Do not be tempted to fill pauses by asking additional questions or making irrelevant comments. Sometimes, silence is the best cue for eliciting further information; but it can also be oppressive and care needs to be taken in the use of this technique. It is important also that the interviewer does not interrupt the child when they are still speaking. Interrupting the child may disempower the witness and also suggests that only short answers are required.

2.155 There are different types of question, which vary in the amount of information they are likely to provide and their susceptibility to produce inaccurate responses from children. The most important types are:

- > open-ended;
- > specific-closed;
- > forced-choice; and
- > leading questions.

Content of questions

2.156 Questions should be kept as short and simple in construction as possible. Each question should contain only one point (see Chapter 4, paragraphs 4.168 and 4.169 for more information about multiple questions). The younger the child, the shorter and more simply phrased the question should be. Interviewers should avoid complex questions, with witnesses of all ages, such as those involving double negatives ('Did John not say later that he had not meant to hurt you?') and double questions ('Did you go next door and was Jim waiting for you?'). It is also important that questions do not involve vocabulary with which the child is unfamiliar. Very young children, for instance, have particular problems with words denoting location ('behind', 'in front of', 'beneath' and 'above'), and in the event of ambiguity it may be necessary to ask the child to demonstrate what they mean. Merely asking a child whether they understand a given word is insufficient; they may be familiar with a word but still not understand its real meaning (for instance, they may think of 'the defendant' as someone who defends themselves against assault).

2.157 Vocabulary can be particularly important in dealing with allegations of sexual abuse, where children may use terms that are personal to themselves or their families. Also, they may use terms like 'front bottom' which are vague and non-specific. It is always advisable for the interviewer to ensure that they understand what the child means. The use of a doll or diagrams (see paragraph 2.196) is always preferable to children referring to their own bodies when reference needs to be made to the location of sexual acts. Where a young child uses the appropriate adult terminology, it may still be necessary to check their understanding.

2.158 The information requested in questions should always take account of the child's stage of development. Many concepts that are taken for granted in adult conversation are only acquired gradually as children develop. Therefore, questions that rely upon the grasp of such concepts may produce misleading and unreliable responses from children, which can damage the overall credibility of their statements in the interview. Concepts with which children have difficulty include:

- > dates and times;
- > length and frequency of events; and
- > weight, height and age estimates.

Such concepts are only gradually mastered. For the concept of time, for instance, telling the time is learned by the average child at around seven years of age, but an awareness of the days of the week and the seasons does not occur until at least a year later. Age norms are only a guide and it should be anticipated in the planning phase whether a particular child is likely to perform above or below such norms. There are a number of techniques for overcoming difficulties of measurement. Height, weight and age can be specified relative to another person known to the child (e.g. the interviewer or a member of the child's family). Time and date estimates can also be made by reference to markers in the child's life (e.g. festive seasons, holidays, birthday celebrations, or their class at school). Time of day and the duration of events can sometimes be assisted by questions that refer to television programmes watched by the child or to home or school routine.

2.159 When posing questions, the interviewer should try to make use of information that the child has already provided and words/concepts that the child is familiar with (e.g. for time, location, persons). Some children have difficulty understanding pronouns (e.g. he, she, they). In these circumstances it is better for the interviewer to use people's names wherever possible.

Open-ended questions

2.160 An open-ended question is one that is worded in such a way as to enable the child to provide more information about an event in a way that is not leading, suggestive or putting them under pressure. Open-ended questions allow the witness to control the flow of information and minimise the risk that the interviewer will impose their view of what happened.

The temptation for the interviewer of a child who has disclosed relevant information in the free narrative phase is for the interviewer to immediately ask a series of very focused or even leading questions to 'get to the heart of the matter'. This should be resisted: such a procedure may upset the child and risk producing misleading information, and may cause difficulties if the recording is played at court. Research and practice shows that the most reliable and detailed answers from children of all ages are secured from open-ended questions. It is important, therefore, that the questioning phase should begin with open-ended questions and that this type of question should be widely employed throughout the interview.

2.161 Questions beginning with the phrases 'Tell me', or the words 'describe' or 'explain' are useful examples of this type of question. Examples of open-ended questions are:

'You said you were... Tell me everything that you remember.'

2.162 Open-ended questions can provide the child with the opportunity to expand on relevant issues raised in their free narrative account. Thus, if the child has said that her stepfather had hit her with a cricket bat, the interviewer might say: 'Tell me about him hitting you with the bat.' This type of question can be used to try to expand on any other salient or relevant parts of the child's narrative. There will be children who have said very little in the free narrative phase. Here, an open-ended question can still be asked to prompt any further information. If such open-ended questions cause the child to become distressed, it may be necessary for the interviewer to move away from the topic onto a neutral theme of the kind explored in the rapport phase and then to return to the topic again when the child has regained their composure.

2.163 It is rarely possible to use only open-ended questions with children. For instance, research suggests that children who have been threatened or sworn to secrecy about abuse may only respond to more specific questions. Even when children are prepared to provide information in response to open-ended prompts, further specific-closed questions may be necessary to obtain enough evidence to proffer detailed charges. Young children too may be unable to access material in memory through open-ended questions alone (see paragraph 2.166). Where it is necessary to ask more specific questions, it is advisable to follow them with an open-ended question to return the initiative to the child.

Specific-closed questions

2.164 A closed question is a question that closes down an interviewee's response and thus allows only a relatively narrow range of responses to be obtained, where the response usually consists of one word or a short phrase. Closed questions can, therefore, be appropriate or inappropriate in nature, depending on the quality of the information likely to be obtained from the interviewee. Specific-closed questions are appropriate and serve to ask in a non-suggestive way for extension or clarification of information previously supplied by the witness. Specific-closed questions vary in their degree of explicitness and it is always best to begin with the least explicit version of the question. Thus, a child in a sexual abuse investigation may have responded to an open-ended prompt by mentioning that a named man had climbed into her bed. A specific-closed but non-leading follow-up question might be: 'What was he wearing at the time?' If this yielded no clear answer, a further, more explicit question might be: 'Was he wearing any clothes?'

2.165 Examples of specific-closed questions are the questions that begin Who, What, Where, When, Why. 'Why' questions should be used with special care in abuse investigations as they may be interpreted by children as implying blame or guilt to them (e.g. 'Why didn't you tell anyone?'). Such 'why' questions can often usefully be replaced with 'what' questions ('What stopped you telling anyone?'). Specific-closed questions should not be repeated in the same form when the first answer is deemed unsatisfactory or incomplete. Children may interpret this as a criticism of their earlier response and sometimes change their response as a consequence, perhaps to one that they believe is closer to the answer the interviewer wants to hear.

2.166 For some young witnesses, open-ended questions may not assist them in accessing their memories because their abilities to search their memory systematically are insufficiently developed. However, they may well respond accurately to specific-closed questions that target information they know. Thus a young child may provide little information to an open-ended prompt such as: 'Can you describe what he was wearing?' but respond readily to a specific-closed question such as: 'What did his clothes look like?' Care must be taken in framing such questions in that the more focused and narrow the specific-closed question becomes, the more likely it is to provoke suggestive responding and may then be labelled leading (see paragraphs 2.171 to 2.174).

2.167 If the child has alleged in their free narrative that they have been the victim of repeated abuse, but have not described specific incidents in any or sufficient detail, specific-closed questions can be employed to try to clarify the point. In considering how best to assist the child to be more specific, the interviewer should bear in mind the difficulties children have in isolating events in time, especially when the individual events follow a similar pattern. A good strategy in isolating such specific events is to enquire about whether there were any which were particularly memorable or exceptional. The questioner can then use this event as a label in asking questions about other incidents ('You told me that you had bruises on your leg after he hit you at Skegness. Did you have any bruises after he hit you the second time?'). Alternatively, they can enquire about the first or last time an event occurred, or about events that occurred at atypical times or locations, because such incidents are likely to be more accessible in memory. When questioning a child about repeated events, it is always better to ask all questions about one event before moving on to the next.

2.168 Another use of specific-closed questions is to explore whether the child is giving an account of an incident for the first time or whether they have told others beforehand. A classic pattern in abuse disclosures is for incidents to come to the attention of investigating agencies after the child has first confided in a trusted person, typically a close friend, teacher or relative. This information is valuable in establishing the consistency of any statements made by the child and tracing the development of the allegation. Where a significant delay has occurred between an alleged incident and the child reporting it, the interviewer should take care in probing the reasons for this as such enquiries can be construed as blaming.

2.169 A closed-specific question may be seen to be inappropriate if it is asked too early in the interview (e.g. in the free narrative account phase) or it is asked when an open-ended question could have been asked instead.

Forced-choice questions

2.170 If a specific-closed question proves unproductive, it may be necessary as a last resort to ask a forced-choice or selection question. This type of question is one that poses fixed alternatives and the child is invited to choose between them (e.g. 'Were you in the bedroom or in the living room when this happened?'). The dangers of using such questions is that children respond with one or other choice without enlarging on their answer and that in the absence of a genuine memory, or if the correct alternative is missing, children tend to guess and pick an option given, rather than saying 'I don't know' or giving the correct (but missing) alternative. The latter may be countered by prefacing the question with a reminder to the child that 'don't know' is an acceptable response and that the interviewer does not know what happened. Alternatively, 'don't know' can be included as an option in the question ('Were you in the bedroom, the living room, or can't you remember?'). Forced-choice questions should never be used for probing central events in the child's account that are likely to be disputed at court, as information obtained by such questions may be seen to have limited evidential value.

Leading questions

2.171 Put simply, a leading question is one which implies the answer or assumes facts that are likely to be in dispute. Whether a question is construed as leading will depend not only on the nature of the question, but also on what the witness has already said in the interview. When a leading question is put improperly to a witness giving evidence at court, opposing counsel can make an objection before the witness replies. This, of course, is not possible during recorded interviews, but it is likely that should the interview be submitted as evidence in court proceedings, portions might be edited out or, in the worst case, the whole recording may be ruled inadmissible (see Appendix D).

2.172 In addition to legal objections, research indicates that interviewees' responses to leading questions tend to be determined more by the manner of questioning than by valid remembering. Leading questions can serve not merely to influence the child's answer, but may also significantly distort the child's memory in the direction implied by the leading question. For these reasons, leading questions should only be used as a last resort, where all other questioning strategies have failed to elicit any kind of response. On occasions, a leading question can produce relevant information that has not been led by the question. If this does occur, the interviewer should take care not to follow up this question with further leading questions. Rather, they should revert to open-ended questions in the first instance or specific-closed questions.

2.173 A leading question that prompts a child into spontaneously providing information going beyond that implied by the question will normally be acceptable to the courts. However, unless there is absolutely no alternative, the interviewer should never be the first to suggest to the witness that a particular offence has been committed, or that a particular person was responsible. Once such a step has been taken it will be extremely difficult to counter the argument that the interviewer 'put the idea into the witness's head' and that the account is therefore tainted.

2.174 Of course, there may be circumstances in the interview where the use of leading questions is unlikely to result in any legal challenge; for instance, during the rapport phase when a witness is being taken through their name and address or is being asked for agreed factual information, such as members of the family and their names. However, good interviewing practice should discourage leading questions with all but the youngest and most reticent witnesses. The use of leading questions in the rapport phase may inhibit the child from responding in their own words later in the interview and it is not always possible at the time to anticipate what facts might subsequently be in dispute. Moreover, the use of inappropriate leading questions may produce nonsensical or inconsistent replies, which may damage the child's credibility as a witness.

Topic selection

2.175 Within the questioning phase of the interview, the interviewer should subdivide the interviewee's account into manageable topics or episodes and seek elaboration on each area using open-ended and then specific-closed questions as outlined above. Each topic/episode should be systematically dealt with until the child is unable to provide any more information. Interviewers should try to avoid topic-hopping (i.e. rapidly moving from one topic to another and back again) as this is not helpful for the child's remembering processes and may confuse them.

2.176 Good questioning should also avoid the asking of a series of predetermined questions. Instead the sequence of questions should be adjusted according to the child's own retrieval processes. This is what 'witness-compatible questioning' means. Each individual will memorise information concerning the event in a unique way. Thus, for maximum retrieval/information gain, the order of the questioning should resemble the structure of the child's knowledge of the event and should not be based on the interviewer's notion or a set protocol. It is the interviewer's task to deduce how the relevant information is stored by the child (via the free narrative account) and to organise the order of questions accordingly.

Misleading statements

2.177 Children can on occasion provide misleading accounts of events, but these are often the result of misunderstandings or misremembering rather than deliberate fabrication. The most common cause of such misunderstandings is the interviewer failing to ask appropriate types of question or reaching a premature conclusion that the interviewer then presses the child to confirm. Like adult witnesses, children can on occasion be misleading in their statements, either by fabricating allegations or by omitting evidentially important information from their answers. Where inconsistencies in the child's account give rise to suspicion, the interviewer should explore these inconsistencies with the child after they have completed their basic account. Children should only be challenged directly over an inconsistency in exceptional circumstances and even then only when it is essential to do so. Rather such inconsistencies should be presented in the context of puzzlement by the interviewer and the need to be quite clear what the child has said. On no account should the interviewer voice their suspicions to the child or call them a liar: there may be a perfectly innocuous explanation for any inconsistency.

2.178 In evaluating accounts, the interviewer should not rely upon cues from the child's behaviour as guides to the reliability or otherwise of children's statements. Where a child uses language or knowledge, particularly of sexual matters, that is believed to be inappropriate for a child of that age, specific questions can be asked to try to locate the source of that knowledge. Likewise, if it is suspected that children alleging sexual abuse may have been exposed to sexually explicit films, videos, internet sites or magazines, specific questions can be employed to explore whether parts of the child's account could conceivably be derived from such sources. It is important that all such questions should be reserved for the end of the formal questioning so as not to disrupt the child's narrative.

Phase four: closing the interview

2.179 Every interview should have a closure phase. Closure should occur irrespective of whether an interview has been completed or been terminated prematurely. Closure can be brief, but should normally involve the following features:

- > check with the second interviewer, if present;
- > summarise the evidentially important statements made by the child, as much as possible in the child's own words, having told the child to intervene if any of the summarising is incorrect;
- > answer any questions from the child;
- > thank the child for their time and effort;
- > provide advice on seeking help and a contact number;
- > return to rapport or neutral topics; and
- > report the end-time of the interview.

2.180 The lead interviewer should first consult with the interview monitor, if present, as to whether there are any additional questions that need to be raised or ambiguities or apparent contradictions that could usefully be resolved. Where the child has provided significant evidence, the lead interviewer should check with the child that they have correctly understood the important parts of the child's account. This should be done as much as possible using the child's own language and terms, not as a summary provided by the interviewer in adult language. There is a danger that any summary may include statements or assumptions at variance with the child's account, so it is useful if the child is reminded that they should correct any errors made by the interviewer. The opportunity should also be taken to check that the child has nothing further they wish to add.

2.181 Where nothing of evidential value has emerged from the interview, it is important that the child should not be made to feel that they have failed or have somehow disappointed the interviewer.

2.182 The aim of closure should be that, as far as possible, the child should leave the interview in a positive frame of mind. In addition to the formal elements, it will be useful to revert to neutral topics discussed in the rapport phase to assist this. It is normal to complete a video-recorded interview by stating the end-time.

Evaluation

2.183 Evaluation should take two primary forms:

- (i) evaluation of the information obtained; and
- (ii) evaluation of the interviewer's performance.

Evaluation of the information obtained

2.184 After the interview has concluded, the interviewing team will need to make an objective assessment as to the information obtained and evaluate this in light of the whole case. Are there any further actions and/or enquires required? What direction should the case take?

Evaluation of interviewer performance

2.185 The interviewer's skills should be evaluated. This can take the form of self-evaluation, with the interviewer examining the interview for areas of good performance and poor performance. This should result in a development plan. The interview could also be assessed by a supervisor and/or someone who is qualified to examine the interview and give good constructive feedback to the interviewer, highlighting areas for improvement. This should form part of a staff appraisal system (see tier 4 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)).

Post-interview documentation and storage of recordings

2.186 The interviewer should complete the relevant paperwork as soon as possible after the interview is completed, including the Record of Video Interview (ROVI) referred to in Appendix K. A statement dealing with the preparation and conduct of the interview should be made while the events are still fresh in the interviewer's mind. Responsibility for transcription and the stage at which transcription should take place is set out in Appendix L.

2.187 Recordings should be stored as recommended in Appendix J.

Further interviews

2.188 One of the key aims of video-recording early investigative interviews is to reduce the number of times on which children need to provide their account. Good pre-interview planning will often ensure that all the salient points are covered within a single interview. However, even with an experienced interviewer and good planning, an additional interview may be necessary in some circumstances. These include:

- > where children indicate to a third party that they have significant new information that was not disclosed at the initial interview, but which they now wish to share with the interviewing team;
- > where the initial interview opens up new lines of enquiry or wider allegations that cannot be satisfactorily explored within the time available for the interview;
- > where in the preparation of their defence, an accused raises matters not covered in the initial interview; or
- > where significant new information emerges from other witnesses or sources.

In such circumstances, a supplementary interview may be necessary and this too should be video-recorded. Consideration should always be given as to whether holding such an interview would be in the child's interests. Supplementary interviews should not be conducted in an attempt to retrieve a situation in which the child's evidence is likely to have been compromised by the use of inappropriate techniques or questioning styles by the interviewer during a previous evidential interview. Supplementary interviews for evidential purposes should only be conducted by members of joint investigation teams when they are fully satisfied, if necessary after consultation with the CPS, that such an interview is necessary. The reasons for the decision should be fully recorded in writing.

Identification procedures

2.189 Where a video-recorded interview has been conducted by virtue of this chapter, the production of facial composites using E-FIT (electronic facial identification) or other systems or the production of an artist's impression should also be video-recorded. This will enable the court to hear the evidence from the child in the same medium as the main evidence-in-chief and show how any new evidence has come about, giving confidence to the evidence gathering process and reducing the need for the child to give additional evidence-in-chief in the witness box or by live link. Staff carrying out these procedures should be suitably trained to interview and record the evidence in line with this document (see Appendix E for more detailed advice on identification parades, with witnesses interviewed in accordance with this guidance).

Therapeutic help for the child

2.190 A child witness may be judged by the investigating team, and/or by those professionals responsible for the welfare of the child, to require therapeutic help prior to giving evidence in criminal proceedings. It is vital that professionals undertaking therapy with prospective child witnesses prior to a criminal trial adhere to the official guidance: Provision of Therapy for Child Witnesses Prior to a Criminal Trial: Practical Guidance (CPS and the Department of Health with the Home Office, 2001).

2.191 The CPS and 'those involved in the prosecution of an alleged abuser have no authority to prevent a child from receiving therapy' (p.24, paragraph 6.1) and 'whether a child should receive therapy before the criminal trial is not a decision for the police or the Crown Prosecution Service' (p.16, paragraph 4.3). However, the police and the CPS must be made aware that therapy is proposed, is being undertaken, or has been undertaken (p.24, paragraph 6.2) so that consideration can be given to whether or not the provision of such therapy is likely to impact on the criminal case (p.24, paragraph 6.3). At all times the importance of not coaching the child or rehearsing the child in matters of direct evidential value must be borne in mind by the professional undertaking therapeutic work with the child. (For further discussion about coaching see R v Momodou and Limani [2005] EWCA Crim 177; [2005] 2 All ER 571; [2005] 2 Cr App R 6).

The cognitive interview (CI)

2.192 This interviewing procedure was developed by cognitive psychologists and it contains, as well as procedures based on good communication skills (many of which have been described above), a number of procedures specifically designed to assist witnesses access their memories. These procedures are usually referred to as:

- > mental reinstatement of context;
- > report everything;
- > change the temporal order of recall; and
- > change perspective.

2.193 A number of professionals who have worked with children recommend use of the CI, though it is not advised for children below a developmental age of seven. In addition, research has found that unless the training of interviewers who attempt to use the CI has been appropriate, they will fail to use this technique effectively and could confuse the witness. Some witnesses may not be able to benefit from all of the CI procedures (e.g. young child witnesses and witnesses with autism may well not be able to 'change perspective' and thus this component is not recommended). See Investigative Interviewing: Psychology and Practice by R. Milne and R. Bull (Wiley, 1999), for more detailed information.

2.194 Interviewers, and their senior managers, need to be aware that techniques that assist witnesses to produce more recall will result in interviews that last longer. Surveys of those who use the CI have found that they often report it to be effective. However, their workloads and their supervisors put them under pressure not to conduct interviews that are time consuming. Such pressures should be resisted for interviews with all vulnerable witnesses, including children.

2.195 Further information on the techniques that make up the CI can be found in Part 4B of this document.

Special interviewing techniques

Props

2.196 The use of conventional dolls, drawings and small figures can function as very useful communication aids, but interviewers need to be aware of their pitfalls as well as advantages. Young children or those with communication difficulties may be able to provide clearer accounts when such props are used, compared with purely verbal approaches. For example, drawings or dolls may allow a child to demonstrate body parts or an abusive incident, while a doll's house may help the child to describe the environment in which an incident took place. Very young (i.e. pre-school) children can have difficulty relating props to the real-life objects they are meant to represent, so the use of props with this age group is not recommended. All props should be used with caution and not combined with leading questions.

Confusion can arise if an object or toy is introduced into the interview which was not in fact part of the event. The need for the use of props should be carefully considered during the planning phase of the interview.

2.197 Where anatomically accurate dolls are to be employed, it is particularly important that the interviewer is trained in their use and understands how they might be misused: a combination of these dolls and leading questions can elicit misleading statements from children. Children's interactions with such dolls alone are unlikely to produce evidence that could be used in criminal proceedings. In the main, anatomically accurate dolls should only be used as an adjunct to the interview to allow the child to demonstrate the meaning of terms used by them or to clarify verbal statements. Anatomically accurate dolls can be used very effectively to clarify body parts, position of bodies and so on, as can conventional dolls. However, they should only be used following verbal disclosure of a criminal offence by the child or where there is a very high suspicion that an offence has been committed which the child is unable to put into words.

Other interviewing techniques

2.198 There are a number of specialised interview techniques that have been developed for interviewing children and these may be acceptable to the courts as an alternative to the method recommended in this guidance, provided evidential considerations are borne in mind and the child's well-being is safeguarded. Provided the interviewer avoids suggestive questions and succeeds in eliciting a spontaneous account of the substance of the allegation, there is no reason why such evidence should not be acceptable to the courts. The investigative team should discuss with senior managers or an interview adviser (tier 5 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)), and if necessary consult with CPS, before undertaking these alternative procedures. It is essential that the interviewers involved are specially trained in techniques concerned. Each procedure is described only briefly and further information can be obtained by consulting the relevant sources (see Appendix Q).

2.199 Among these specialised interviewing techniques are those for children who are particularly reticent or who may be under duress not to divulge information relevant to the investigation and who thus may not respond to conventional questioning. In the facilitative interview, children are asked about pleasant and unpleasant experiences, 'okay' and 'not okay' actions, what the child would like to change in their life, and there may be an open-ended discussion about secrets. In the systematic approach to gathering evidence (SAGE) interview, the child is encouraged over a number of separate sessions to talk about significant persons and places in the child's life and their attitude toward them. Systematic comparison of the child's responses enables the trained interviewer to identify areas of particular concern which can then be explored more thoroughly using open-ended questions (see A Guide to Interviewing Children: Essential Skills for Counsellors, Police, Lawyers and Social Workers by C. Wilson and M. Powell (Routledge, 2001), for more detailed information).

2.200 The structured investigative protocol is a variant on the phased approach to the interview recommended in this guidance. This has been developed by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD) as a result of concern over insufficient use of open-ended questions by practitioners. Interviewers use a learned series of open-ended prompts rather than following their own pattern of questioning to elaborate upon the child's initial free narrative account (see The NICHD Protocol for Investigative Interviews of Alleged Sex-abuse Victims by M.E. Lamb et al (unpublished manuscript, 1999) and Using a Scripted Protocol in Investigative Interviews: A Pilot Study by J.K. Sternberg and M.E. Lamb in Applied Developmental Science (1999) for more detailed information).

2.201 Statement validity assessment (SVA) is a technique widely used in Germany, Canada and the USA to interview and assess the statements of children in sexual abuse investigations. It shares with this guidance an emphasis on obtaining a free narrative linked to open-ended questioning. A key feature of SVA is criteria-based content analysis (CBCA), where a child's statement is examined for the presence of certain features, which are believed to characterise truthful accounts. The technique relies upon an extended narrative being available for analysis and so it is inappropriate for witnesses who provide only limited narratives, such as the very young, children with communication difficulties or depressed children. A number of issues concerning the reliability and validity of CBCA and its use in criminal proceedings in England and Wales are as yet unresolved (see Detecting Lies and Deceit: The Psychology of Lying and its Implications for Professional Practice by A. Vrij (Wiley, 2000) for more detailed information).

Interviewing children with disabilities

Planning and preparation

2.202 The phrase 'children with disabilities' encompasses a wide range of abilities and disabilities. Interviewers need to be aware of the extensive differences between potential interviewees in their social, emotional and cognitive development, and in their communication skills, the degree of their understanding and in their particular needs. It will nearly always be necessary to seek specialist advice on what special procedures are appropriate and to consider if the services of an intermediary or an interpreter are required (see paragraphs 2.90 to 2.101).

2.203 There is rarely any reason in principle why children with disabilities should not take part in a video-recorded interview, provided the interview is tailored to the particular needs and circumstances of the child. This will require additional planning and preparation by the interviewing team and a degree of flexibility in scheduling the interview. Particular attention will need to be taken to ensure that a safe and accessible environment is created for the child and that the interview suite is adapted to the child's particular needs. Children with disabilities are likely to have already come to the attention of professionals, as a result of which, information is likely to be available from existing assessments and from workers who know the child well. Such information should enable the interviewing team to make an assessment of the likely impact, if any, of a disability on communication. Where children have specific communication difficulties, aids such as drawings or photographs may need to be prepared to facilitate questioning. All such aids should be preserved for possible production at court.

2.204 It is important to find out what impact the child's disability is likely to have on the communication process, and to adopt a positive approach that focuses on the child's abilities when trying to find out how they can be helped to communicate.

2.205 The impact of any medication being taken by the child on the interview, including the most appropriate timing for it, should be taken into account.

2.206 For some children, a number of shorter sessions may be preferable to a single interview. For example, children with learning disabilities often have shorter attention spans, giving rise to a need for regular and frequent breaks. In addition to this, some children with physical or learning disabilities might find communicating to be quite demanding and this is also likely to heighten the need for breaks and a slow pace, thus lengthening the duration of the interview(s).

2.207 Children with learning disabilities tend to adapt more slowly to unusual situations than their peers. It is, therefore, likely that more time will be needed to prepare the child for the interview, and extra time might be needed for the rapport phase.

2.208 Children with learning disabilities tend to be easily distracted. Interview rooms should, therefore, be organised so as to minimise the opportunity for distraction.

2.209 The possibility that children with learning disabilities might have difficulty with time concepts should be taken into account while planning the interview.

2.210 The procedures that make up the cognitive interview (see paragraphs 2.192 to 2.195) can be used in respect of children with mild learning disabilities over the age of seven, although the change perspective technique is not recommended.

The interview

Phase one: rapport (see also paragraphs 2.137 to 2.146)

2.211 It is important that adequate time is allowed for this phase. Establishing rapport between the interviewer and the child will in itself require more time and attention, especially if an intermediary or an interpreter is needed to assist communication. There are also additional functions of the rapport phase for children with disabilities. These are to:

- > relax the interviewer;
- > educate the viewer of the video about the child and their disabilities;
- > dispel common myths and prejudices (e.g. physical impairments affect a child's intelligence); and
- > allow the child to demonstrate communication and understanding.

2.212 It is important for the child to sense the importance of communicating clearly, and for the interviewer to develop as much skill as possible in talking with and understanding the child. Any difficulty that the interviewer or the interview monitor has in understanding the child's account at the time is likely to be magnified for any person subsequently viewing the video-recording. The interviewer needs to be comfortable about referring to this and asking the child to repeat, rephrase or clarify as necessary, and the interview monitor needs to ensure that the recording can demonstrate the child's communication method.

2.213 The child needs to be given an opportunity to explain their world, especially where this might be unusual and relevant for the interview (e.g. if the child stays away from their family, if there are different adults involved with their care at home or elsewhere, if the child needs intimate care or other 'unusual' help in day-to-day life). It is important to establish the context at this stage to give meaning to what may follow, as it is often harder to do so later. If, for example, a child with disabilities has a number of adults involved in their care, it will be important to demonstrate their ability to distinguish reliably between these different people. Alternatively, if a child needs very invasive care procedures (e.g. intermittent catheterisation) it will be helpful to establish the child's comprehension of this as a process before any discussion of possible sexual abuse ensues.

2.214 The experience of some children with disabilities might make them more compliant and eager to please or to see themselves as devalued. Some children with learning disabilities could have problems understanding the concept of truth, and interpreted communication may lead to additional confusion. Some children may need explicit permission to refute adult suggestions. Even with this permission, some children may find this impossible to do. It can help if everyone in the room makes a commitment to tell the truth (including the interviewer and any additional adults). It is important to convey that the child and the interviewer and any additional adults (including any interpreter or intermediary) should say 'I don't know', 'I don't know how to say that' (where the child's understanding has sufficiently developed), or 'I don't understand', and not to guess if they are unsure.

2.215 Children with disabilities might need very explicit permission to request breaks, and a clear, simple sign, gesture or word with which to do so. Given the concentration required by all parties, it is important to establish that the adults can request breaks as well as the child.

Phase two: free narrative account (see also paragraphs 2.147 to 2.152)

2.216 Communication impairments do not necessarily prevent a child from giving a spontaneous account. Exceptions to this include when a child is:

- > relying heavily on yes/no signalling;
- > using a communication board with a vocabulary that makes it difficult to discuss certain topics; or
- > where a child has not reached the developmental stage of being able to tell a story.

In these circumstances, the services of an intermediary should be secured to assist communication.

2.217 Children with learning disabilities are capable of providing accurate free narrative accounts, although such accounts are likely to be less complete than those provided by their peers. While some omissions are likely to be the result of the child remembering less, some will probably be due to an assumption by the child that the interviewer already knows about the alleged event. It might, therefore, be advisable to repeat that the interviewer was not present and to reiterate the need for the child to report as much as they can remember, at a number of points in the interview, including the free narrative phase.

2.218 Children with learning disabilities may often require a greater degree of facilitation before it is clear whether an offence has occurred and, if so, what form it took. Open-ended prompts should be used as far as possible. Reflecting back to the child in an open, non-directive manner what they have told the interviewer helps to ensure accuracy as well as facilitating the production of further details.

Phase three: questioning (see also paragraphs 2.153 to 2.178)

2.219 A clear and informed plan for questioning is essential to ensure that a child with disabilities is not expected to respond to questions they cannot answer, or questions that are inherently confusing. This is important not just in terms of the child's emotional welfare, but also in order to avoid undermining the child's credibility. For example:

- > Children with disabilities might be dependent on others for intimate care; interviewers will need to be able to distinguish between necessary caring or medical procedures and abusive or criminal actions.

- > Children may be receiving orthopaedic treatment or using postural management equipment that might cause pain or discomfort but should never cause injury.
- > A child's condition may restrict the positions they can get into or be placed into and some positions might in themselves be dangerous.
- > Certain physical or neurological conditions are likely to affect the sensations a child can feel.
- > A child with a sensory impairment may be restricted in some of the information they can provide about the identity of the alleged suspect or details of the alleged offence(s).

2.220 Questions should be simple and concrete. The use of abstract concepts, double negatives and other inappropriate questions should be avoided.

2.221 With some methods of communication, such as communication boards, questions can only be asked in a closed form which demands a yes or no response. Techniques that can increase the evidential validity of closed questions include:

- > avoiding a series of 'yes' responses by suggesting less likely alternatives first;
- > completing any series of related questions, rather than halting at the first 'yes'; and
- > reverting to open questions wherever possible.

When offering the child a range of alternatives, consistent wording is needed for each, particularly if the child has a learning disability or poor short-term memory.

Phase four: closing the interview (see also paragraphs 2.179 to 2.182)

2.222 Given the relative lack of knowledge of investigative interviewing of children with disabilities, it would be helpful for developing practice to obtain feedback from the child on their experience of the interview, and perhaps also to acknowledge again additional barriers to communication that discussion of sensitive issues such as abuse can provide. As long as there is no discussion of the evidence itself, such debriefing need not take place on camera, though a note should be kept of the points raised.

Interviewing very young or psychologically disturbed children

2.223 When a child is very young or known to be psychologically disturbed, the planning phase for the interview needs to be undertaken with great care. Consideration should be given to the use of an intermediary in the planning process and during such interviews.

2.224 Thought should be given to the venue for the interview. Young children may find the unfamiliar surroundings of an interview suite intimidating. Adequate time should be allowed for rapport, and age-appropriate toys and colouring materials should be provided to settle the child. Consideration should be given to seeking specialist advice or bringing in an interviewer with particular skills and experience in the area. It may not be possible to conduct a conventional interview: such children may say very little in the free narrative phase and not respond well to open-ended questions. However, the use of purely focused questions carries with it the risk that the child will say what they believe the interviewer wants to hear. Such risks are further increased through the use of leading questions. Children of this age often lack social experience and do not feel at ease with strangers. This may require interviewers to seek social support from an independent adult known to the child.

2.225 One response to these difficulties may be to make a decision to distribute the interview over a number of short sessions, conducted by the same interviewer, and spread over a number of days. When this occurs, care must be taken to avoid repetition of the same focused questions over time, which could lead to unreliable or inconsistent responding in some children and interviews being ruled inadmissible by the court. Rapport and closure should be included in each session.

The child who becomes a suspect

2.226 It may happen that a child who is being interviewed comes under suspicion of involvement in a criminal offence, perhaps by uttering a self-incriminating statement. Although this is not a frequent occurrence, interviewers should bear in mind that victims and witnesses could also on occasion be perpetrators.

2.227 If it is concluded that the evidence of the child as a suspect is also highly relevant to a particular case, the interview should be terminated and the child told that it is possible that they may be interviewed concerning these matters at a later time. Care should be taken not to close the interview abruptly in these circumstances. Instead, the child should be allowed to complete any statement they wish to make. Any admission by a child in the course of an investigative interview may not be admissible as evidence in criminal procedures. Normally, a further interview would need to be carried out in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Code for the Detention, Treatment and Questioning of Persons by Police Officers (Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, Code C). The Code provides, among other matters, for the cautioning of a suspect and for the presence of an appropriate adult during questioning.

2.228 A child who confesses to a criminal offence during the course of an interview may ask the interviewer for some guarantee of immunity. On no account should any such guarantee be given to a child over the age of criminal responsibility (10 years), however remote the prospect of criminal proceedings against the child might seem. Nor should the interviewer give any kind of undertaking regarding the child's future care arrangements. If the child is to be interviewed in accordance with Code C, they will be cautioned and the purpose of the interview made clear.

2.229 Where the priority is to obtain evidence from the child as a victim or a witness, the interview can proceed and should follow this guidance. So far as is practicable, consideration should be given in the planning stage as to how interviewers will deal with any confessions of criminal offences made by the child in the course of the interview. Any decision on an appropriate course of action will involve taking into account the seriousness of the crime admitted and weighing it against the seriousness of the crime perpetrated against the witness. It is preferable to anticipate and plan for such an eventuality while recognising that any decisions on a particular course of action are likely to depend upon what has been disclosed by the witness during the course of the interview.

3 Planning and conducting interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses

Part 3A: Planning and preparing for interviews

Aims

By the end of Part 3A, those involved in planning interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses should be able to consider, with respect to each case:

- > the different types of vulnerable adult witness (paragraph 3.1);
- > information that might assist in the recognition of vulnerable adult witnesses (paragraphs 3.2 to 3.16);
- > initial contact with vulnerable adult witnesses (paragraphs 3.17 and 3.18);
- > how different types of vulnerable adult witnesses may be supported and safeguarded at interview (paragraphs 3.19 to 3.41);
- > issues of consent and competence (paragraphs 3.42 to 3.53);
- > information on planning interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses (paragraphs 3.54 to 3.91);
- > using the planning information to plan interviews with vulnerable adult witnesses (paragraphs 3.92 to 3.137), including when to consider whether an assessment by an intermediary is appropriate (paragraphs 3.115 to 3.120); and
- > preparing vulnerable adult witnesses for an interview (paragraphs 3.138 to 3.144).

What follows is a recommended procedure for planning and preparing for interviews with the witnesses referred to in this chapter. Chapter 3B covers the interview itself and treats the interview as a process in which a variety of interviewing techniques are deployed in the framework of a phased approach. While what follows in this chapter and Chapter 3B should not be regarded as a checklist to be rigidly worked through, the sound legal framework that it provides should not be departed from by interviewers unless they have discussed and agreed the reasons for doing so with their senior manager or an interview advisor (tier 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers' Investigative Interviewing Strategy, ACPO 2004). Any such agreements and the rationale underpinning them should be recorded. It may subsequently be necessary to explain such departures at court.

Who are vulnerable adult witnesses?

3.1 As described in Chapter 1, the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 recognises four categories of vulnerable witness. The first of these is young witnesses under the age of 17 and interviewing procedures for these witnesses are dealt with in detail in Chapter 2. The other three categories of vulnerable witness, which are the subject of this chapter, can be summarised as follows:

- > witnesses with a learning disability;
- > witnesses with a physical disability; and
- > witnesses with a mental disorder.

In addition to considering the provisions of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999, it should be noted that the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 may apply to these vulnerable groups where discrimination occurs in respect of the services provided to them.

Recognising vulnerable adult witnesses

3.2 Recognition of vulnerability may be particularly difficult when interviewing takes place at a police station shortly after an alleged offence, due to the stress and immediacy of the action. The guidance provided here is in accord with the separate guidance to the police contained in Vulnerable Witnesses: A Police Service Guide (Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and Home Office, 2002), which can be consulted for additional information.

3.3 If a witness exhibits confusion, some initial clarification may also be necessary to establish whether it could be due to:

- > intoxication through intake of alcohol and/or drugs;
- > withdrawal from drugs;
- > mental disorder;
- > impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability);
- > a physical disability or disorder;

- > incapacity through age;
- > trauma; and/or
- > fear or distress.

All of these factors may affect cognition and the ability to give a clear statement. Witnesses may be affected by more than one vulnerable condition: for example, a witness with a mental disorder may also be subjected to fear and distress. When in doubt, and where practicable, the police officer should consider an early assessment by an expert, such as a clinical psychologist, a speech and language therapist or a psychiatrist, to avoid compromising any evidence obtained during the interview.

Significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)

3.4 Learning disability is not a description of one disability, but a collection of many different factors that might affect a person's ability in relation to learning and social functioning to greatly varying degrees. While some 200 causes of learning disability have been identified, most diagnoses are still 'unspecified learning disabilities'. People with high support needs may be easily identified but people with mild or moderate learning disabilities may be more difficult to identify.

3.5 It is impossible to give a single description of competence in relation to any particular disability, because there is such a wide range of abilities within each in terms of degree of intellectual and social impairment. However, there are some indicators that may help identify a witness with a learning disability.

3.6 A police officer or adult social care social worker in the community may know the witness, so an initial request should be made for any local information. If the witness is not known to the services, some early discussion/questioning by a specially trained member of the investigating team might be helpful in identifying possible disabilities. Relevant questions include:

- > Where did the witness go to school?
Was the school designated as a 'special school'?
- > If the school was not designated as a 'special school' but was 'mainstream', did the witness have a designated support teacher?
Does the witness have any reading or writing difficulties?
- > What does the witness do during the day?
Does the witness attend a college that makes particular provision for students with learning disabilities?
- > Where does the witness spend their leisure time?
At a day centre or Gateway Club?
- > Where does the witness live?
Is this a group home or sheltered housing?

- > Does the witness have an adult social care social worker or care assistant?

Would the witness like this person to be contacted for interview or pre-trial support? (This question is not appropriate where the adult social care social worker or care assistant is suspected of having abused the person.)

- > Does the witness receive any benefits relating to disability?

Behavioural indications of learning disability

3.7 These are indications only and by themselves do not necessarily indicate that the witness has a learning disability:

- > a slow and/or confused response to questions;
- > difficulty in understanding simple questions;
- > speech difficulties;
- > difficulty/inability with reading and writing;
- > limited understanding of a wide range of concepts, for example:
 - time and place;
 - sequences (before, after, first, last, etc.);
 - spatial position (in, on, under, above, etc.);
 - relationships; and
- > difficulty in remembering personal details or events.

3.8 Though generalisations cannot be made, some characteristics may exist in relation to some syndromes. For example, witnesses with autistic spectrum disorder, which includes Kanner's syndrome and Asperger's syndrome, have a huge range of abilities/disabilities, but:

- > they often have difficulty in making sense of the world and in understanding relationships;
- > they are likely to have little understanding of the emotional pain or problems of others; and
- > they may display great knowledge of certain topics and have an excellent vocabulary, but could be pedantic and literal and may have obsessional interests.

3.9 Some people with learning disabilities are reluctant to reveal that they have a disability, and may be quite articulate, so that it is not always immediately obvious that they do not understand the proceedings in whole or in part.

Physical disability

3.10 Recognition of this type of disability is less likely to be a problem, although some disabilities may be hidden, but it is important to be aware of whether or how a physical disability may affect the person's ability to give a clear statement. Most witnesses will be able to give evidence with support.

3.11 Some physical disabilities may require support. Hearing or speech difficulties may require the attendance of a skilled interpreter and/or speech and language therapist.

Mental disorder

3.12 Mental disorder is legally defined in Section 1(2) of the Mental Health Act 1983 as mental illness, arrested or incomplete development of the mind, psychopathic disorder and any other disorder or disability of the mind.

3.13 This may be the most difficult category to identify for support through Special Measures because of the fluctuating nature of many mental disorders. A person with such a disorder may need special assistance only at times of crisis.

3.14 A brief interview may not reveal mental disorder, but if clear evidence and/or a clear diagnosis becomes available which suggests the need for Special Measures, then these should take account of any emotional difficulties, so as to enable the witness to give evidence with the least possible distress.

3.15 Currently there is no accepted and consistent approach to the assessment of witness competence. It is likely that varying criteria may be used by experts called to make assessments.

3.16 In addition, mental instability might be aggravated by alcohol, drugs and withdrawal from drugs. The effect may be temporary and the time elapsed before a witness is able to give clear evidence will vary according to the type and severity of the intoxication from a few hours to a few days.

Initial contact with vulnerable adult witnesses

3.17 The need to consider holding a video-recorded interview will not always be immediately apparent to either the first police officer who has contact with the witness or other professionals involved prior to the police being informed. Even where it is apparent, the need to take immediate action in terms of securing medical attention and making initial decisions about the criminal investigation plan might be such that some initial questioning is necessary. Any initial questioning should be intended to elicit a brief account of what is alleged to have taken place; a more detailed account should not be pursued at this stage but should be left until the formal interview takes place as described in Part 3B. Such a brief account should include where and when the event is alleged to have taken place and who was involved or otherwise present. This is because this information is likely to influence decisions made in respect of the following aspects of the criminal investigation plan:

- > forensic and medical examination of the victim;
- > scene of crime examination;
- > interviewing of other witnesses;

- > arrest of alleged offender(s); and
- > witness support.

3.18 In these circumstances, any early discussions with the witness should, as far as possible, adhere to the following basic principles:

- > Listen to the witness.
- > Do not stop a witness who is freely recalling significant events.
- > Where it is necessary to ask questions, they should, as far as possible in the circumstances, be open-ended or specific-closed rather than forced-choice, leading or multiple (see paragraphs 3.206 to 3.227).
- > Ask no more questions than are necessary in the circumstances to take immediate action.
- > Make a comprehensive note of the discussion, taking care to record the timing, setting and people present as well as what was said by the witness and anybody else present (particularly the actual questions asked of the witness).
- > Make a note of the demeanour of the witness and anything else that might be relevant to any subsequent formal interview or the wider investigation.
- > Fully record any comments made by the witness or events that might be relevant to the legal process up to the time of the interview.

Support for vulnerable adult witnesses

Witnesses with a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)

3.19 Some witnesses with a learning disability may wish to please people in authority. Some may be suspicious of people, or aggressive, or may wish to impress the interviewer. Interviewing teams should be aware of such possibilities. Consultation with people who know the witness well should give some indication of their likely behaviour and some suggestions as to how interviewers can best interact with the witness.

3.20 Some witnesses with a learning disability may show confusion, memory loss and impaired reasoning. Properly preparing the witness for the interview may help to identify and reduce confusion, emotional distress and anxiety.

3.21 In some instances of mild and moderate learning disability, a difficulty with cognition may not be immediately apparent. The experience that many people with learning disabilities have of discrimination towards them in society is likely to act as an incentive to conceal or minimise their disability whenever possible. Where there are concerns that a witness has a learning disability, even if the extent of the disability is considered to be relatively mild, it is essential that a great deal of care is taken in framing questions and evaluating the witness's response to them.

3.22 Some witnesses with a learning disability communicate using a mixture of words and gestures (e.g. Makaton signs/symbols when used as an augmentative communication system). While an intermediary should be considered in every case where a witness has a learning disability, the services of an intermediary are essential in circumstances where a witness communicates using a mixture of words and gestures.

3.23 Some witnesses with a learning disability do not use speech but communicate using alternative methods of communication. Such alternative methods include sign and symbol systems. Examples of sign systems include Makaton signing and Sign-a-long (these systems may be used either as an augmentative system with speech or as an alternative system without it). Examples of symbol systems include Rebus, Bliss and Makaton. The symbols may be printed on boards or cards, or contained in booklets. They vary from being iconic and concrete to being more abstract in their composition. They may be personalised and can be composed of words, pictures and symbols. While an intermediary should be considered in every case where a witness has a learning disability, the services of an intermediary are essential in circumstances where a witness uses an alternative method of communication instead of speech.

3.24 Many witnesses with a learning disability will be unable to give their evidence in one long interview. In many instances, several short interviews, preferably held on the same day (though not necessarily), would be more likely to lead to a satisfactory outcome.

3.25 Preparation of the witness for the interview and a rapport stage prior to formal questioning during the interview is essential. This will allow the witness to have some familiarity with the personnel who will be involved in the interview, including the interviewer, interview monitor and intermediary (where used).

Witnesses with a physical disability

3.26 For witnesses with hearing and communication difficulties, every effort should be made to ensure that their usual means of communication is supported at interview by means of an interpreter (and/or an intermediary, if appropriate).

3.27 If the witness does not communicate by speech, alternative communication systems are available, such as British Sign Language (BSL) and Sign Supported English (SSE). In these instances, an interpreter capable of signing will be required.

3.28 Other sign and symbol systems may be required for witnesses with additional disabilities. Examples of sign systems include Makaton signing and Sign-a-long. Symbol systems include alphabet boards and boards/books/cards containing pictorial symbols (these symbols vary from being iconic and concrete to being more abstract in their composition). Examples of pictorial symbol systems include Makaton, Rebus and Bliss. Communication boards may also be personalised and composed of words, pictures and symbols. In these circumstances, an intermediary capable of using the communication system in question will be required.

3.29 Some witnesses may also communicate using a mixture of words and gestures. If a witness has an idiosyncratic speech or communication pattern, a vocabulary should be worked out which will need to be explained to all the personnel present at the interview. Initially at least, signs for 'yes', 'no', 'don't know' and 'don't understand' should be identified. In one case, a young woman who used single words along with expressive gestures which were clearly understood by those close to her gave a good account of events. Those interviewing her were made aware of her mode of communication prior to the interview.

3.30 Witnesses who have limited movement may require computer or other electronic communication equipment that can be accessed via fingers, or by pointing to letters or symbols on a board, or by indicating letters or symbols by blinking or by some other means. It is important that witnesses move or point to the letters or symbols themselves; the involvement of a third party is likely to lead to the evidence being ruled as inadmissible.

3.31 The witness may have some associated health or mobility difficulties and would benefit from short interviews, spaced out with periods of rest and refreshment.

3.32 Preparation of the witness for the interview and a rapport stage prior to formal questioning during the interview is essential. This will allow the witness to have some familiarity with the personnel who will be involved in the interview, including the interviewer, interview monitor and intermediary (where used).

Witnesses with a mental disorder

3.33 A mental disorder does not preclude the giving of reliable evidence. However, for many disorders there is a need to protect the witness from additional stress and provide support to enable them to give reliable evidence. The recall of traumatic events can cause significant distress, and recognition of the mental state of the witness and its effect on their behaviour is crucial. There is also the need to ensure that the type of behaviour is identified, as far as possible.

3.34 Witnesses with a mental disorder, such as schizophrenia or other delusional disorders, may give unreliable evidence through delusional memories or by reporting hallucinatory experiences, which are accurate as far as the witness is concerned but bear no relationship to reality (e.g. they might describe a non-existent crime). Challenges to these abnormal ideas may cause extreme reactions and/or distress. Interviewers should probe these accounts carefully, sensitively and in a non-judgemental way with a view to identifying which elements of the account may be delusional and which elements might have a firmer foundation in reality.

3.35 Witnesses may suffer from various forms of anxiety through fear of authority, exposure or retribution. Extreme fear may result in phobias or panic attacks or unjustified fears of persecution. Anxious witnesses may wish to please, they may tell the interviewer what they believe they wish to hear or fabricate imaginary experiences to compensate for loss of memory. The evidence given by depressed witnesses may be influenced by feelings of guilt, helplessness or hopelessness. Witnesses with anti-social or borderline traits may present with a range of behaviours such as deliberately giving false evidence. These disorders cause the most difficulties and contention in diagnosis, and require very careful assessment.

3.36 Witnesses, particularly some older witnesses, may also have dementia, which can cause cognitive impairment. A psychiatrist or clinical psychologist with experience of working with older people should be asked to assess their ability to give reliable evidence and the effect such a procedure might have on their health and mental welfare.

3.37 Witnesses with a mental disorder may show some of the behaviour seen in witnesses with a learning disability, such as confusion, memory loss and impaired reasoning. For this reason, many of the interview practices that are likely to help witnesses with a learning disability may also benefit witnesses with a mental disorder. Properly preparing the witness for the interview may help to identify and reduce confusion, emotional distress and anxiety.

3.38 Cognition may not be an immediate difficulty, but attention to the way a statement is given and how questions are posed must always be considered.

3.39 The witness may wish to please the person in authority. They may be suspicious of the person, or aggressive, or wish to impress the interviewer. Interviewing teams should be aware of such possibilities. Consultation with people who know the witness well should give some indication of their likely behaviour and some suggestions as to how interviewers can best interact with the witness.

3.40 Confusion may be exacerbated by the use of drugs or alcohol or withdrawal from drugs. An assessment should include information as to how this is likely to affect the interview, and how long this effect is likely to last.

3.41 Preparation of the witness for the interview and a rapport stage prior to formal questioning during the interview is essential. This will allow the witness to have some familiarity with the personnel who will be involved in the interview, including the interviewer, interview monitor and intermediary (where used).

Consent

3.42 It is a general principle that all witnesses should freely consent to be interviewed and to have the interview recorded on video. For this reason, interviewers should explain the purpose of a video-recorded interview to the witness in a way that is appropriate to their understanding. Such an explanation should include:

- > the benefits/disadvantages of having or not having the interview video-recorded;
- > who may see the video-recorded interview (including the alleged offender both before the trial and at court); and
- > the different purposes to which a video-recorded interview may be put (e.g. if it appears the video may be useful in disciplinary proceedings against a member of staff who is suspected of abusing a vulnerable adult in their care).

3.43 While interviewers should make a record of the action taken to obtain consent for a video-recorded interview, it is not necessary for the witness to give their consent in writing.

3.44 Obtaining consent for a video-recorded interview may raise difficulties with regard to some groups of vulnerable witnesses, such as those with a learning disability or a mental disorder. In these circumstances, it is important to take account of the principles set out in the Mental Capacity Act 2005 and the Code of Practice that accompanies it.

3.45 Briefly, the Mental Capacity Act applies to anyone over 16 who lacks mental capacity and a 'decision' needs to be made. A 'decision' covers a wide range of matters and would include consent for a video-recorded interview. The Act establishes the principle that everybody should be assumed to have capacity unless established otherwise. It goes on to point out that a communication issue should not be confused with a capacity issue and that every effort should be made to communicate with people, using whatever methods are necessary. An intermediary may be of use in these circumstances (see Section 29, Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999).

3.46 If, following an assessment (the extent of which depends on the circumstances), it is concluded that lack of capacity is an issue, actions should be taken in the 'best interests' of the witness. As far as is reasonably ascertainable, when considering the person's best interests particular account should be taken of the matters set out in Box 3.1.

Box 3.1: Matters to be taken into account when considering best interests

The matters to be taken into account (as specified in Section 1(6) of the Mental Capacity Act 2005) include:

- > the person's past and present wishes and feelings;
- > the beliefs and values that would be likely to influence the person's decision if they had capacity; and
- > the other factors that the person would be likely to consider if they were able to do so.

In seeking to determine the matters set out in Box 3.1, particular account should be taken of the views of those referred to in Box 3.2.

Box 3.2: Views to be taken into account when considering best interests

As specified in Sections 4(4) and 4(7) of the Mental Capacity Act 2005, the following should be considered:

- > such views as the witness is able to express (with such assistance as is necessary); and
- > where it is practicable and appropriate to consult them, the views of:
 - anyone named by the person as someone to be consulted on the matter in question or on matters of that kind;
 - anyone engaged in caring for the person or interested in their welfare;
 - any person with lasting power of attorney granted by the person; and
 - any deputy appointed for the person by a court.

3.47 Where somebody who is involved in the care of a person believed to lack capacity is also suspected of abusing them, this should be taken into account when considering their views of the person's best interests.

3.48 The scope of the consultation with others involved in the care, welfare and treatment of the person lacking capacity very much depends on the nature of the decision and the time available in the circumstances; this means taking account of the urgency of the case and the time at which it arises.

3.49 When considering best interests, account should also be taken of any possibility that the witness will regain capacity and, if so, when this is likely to be (Section 4(3), Mental Capacity Act 2005). This is important in circumstances where, for example, the effect of a witness's medication on their capacity to make a decision changes over time or when a witness is likely to recover from an injury or an illness to the extent that they are likely to be able to participate more fully in the process of making a decision.

3.50 Records should be kept of all decisions taken in a person's best interests, the rationale for that decision and the scope of the consultation that took place in reaching that decision.

Competence

3.51 Competency may be an issue with some vulnerable witnesses. A person is deemed competent to give evidence in criminal proceedings unless it appears to the court that they are not able to understand questions put to them as a witness and give answers to them which can be understood (Section 53(3), Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999). At the court's discretion, the evidence of an expert and/or a non-expert may be called to give advice as to the competence of the witness.

3.52 The defence as well as the prosecution may have an interest in having the witness declared competent. The party calling the witness is required to satisfy the court that, on a balance of probabilities, the witness is competent to give evidence in the proceedings. It is, therefore, important that the prosecution (or the defence) ensure that applications have been made for any Special Measures that will maximise the competence of the vulnerable witness.

3.53 In cases where competence requires definition, the court, following existing procedures, will also decide whether the witness is competent to take the oath. There may be occasions when the court will decide that a person may not be permitted to give evidence on oath in the proceedings; this will not, however, debar the witness from giving evidence. Where a conviction results from unsworn evidence, it is not in itself grounds for appeal. However, if the witness is deemed unable to take the oath, a test of competence to tell the truth should be considered.

Planning and preparing for the interview

3.54 Having identified the type of vulnerability and the effect this will have on the evidence that the witness can give in terms of reliability, careful attention must be paid to planning the interview. Time spent at the planning stage will enhance the delivery of best evidence and minimise errors and inconsistencies at a later stage.

3.55 The purpose of an investigative interview is to ascertain the witness's account of the alleged event(s) and any other information that would assist the investigation. A well-conducted interview will only occur if appropriate planning has taken place. The importance of planning cannot, therefore, be overstated; the success of an interview and thus an investigation could hinge on it. Even if the circumstances of the case are such that it is essential that an early interview takes place, a planning session is required that takes account of all the information available about the witness at the time and identifies the key issues and objectives.

3.56 Planning should take account of the abilities and needs of vulnerable witnesses. Additional time is likely to be required to ensure that witnesses are able to understand and respond to the difficulties and pressures placed upon them by the need to make a statement which will be acceptable to the court.

Attention should be paid at all times to issues of age, disability, gender, race, culture, religion and language.

3.57 Where vulnerability is likely to be an issue, early individual assessment by an expert of the abilities and disabilities of the witness may be desirable to identify any particular difficulties that the witness may experience in producing a satisfactory statement at interview.

3.58 In some cases, it might be advisable for there to be a discussion with the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) in accordance with the guidance set out in Early Special Measures Meetings between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service and Meetings between the Crown Prosecution Service and Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses (CPS, ACPO and the Home Office, 2001). Where such a discussion takes place, there should be a decision about the form in which the statement is to be taken (video-recorded or written). Such decisions must take account of the witness's own expressed preferences.

3.59 At the court's discretion, a responsible person who knows the witness well or an expert with generic knowledge of the witness's condition might subsequently be called to provide advice on whether the witness would benefit from Special Measures. An early request for Special Measures can be made by either the prosecution or the defence (see Chapter 6 for details of Special Measures and their applicability to different types of vulnerable witness).

Planning information

3.60 The planning stage of an interview involves some consideration of three types of information:

- > information about the witness (see paragraphs 3.61 to 3.79);
- > information about the alleged offence(s) (see paragraphs 3.80 and 3.81); and
- > information important to the investigation (see paragraphs 3.82 to 3.91).

At this stage, interviewers need to have differing amounts of knowledge about each type of information. In a general sense, they need to know as much as is possible in the circumstances about the witness and a little about the alleged offence and information important to the investigation.

Information about the witness

3.61 While circumstances will sometimes limit what can be found out about the witness prior to the interview taking place (e.g. as a result of time constraints where the alleged perpetrator is in custody), as much of the following information should be obtained about the witness as is possible:

- > age;
- > gender;
- > sexuality (where the alleged offence might contain a homophobic element);
- > preferred name/form of address;
- > the nature of the witness's disability or mental disorder and the implications of this for the interview process;
- > any medication being taken and its potential impact on the interview (including its timing);
- > domestic circumstances (including whether the witness is currently in a 'safe' environment);
- > the relationship of the witness to the alleged perpetrator;
- > current emotional state (including trauma, distress, shock, depression, fears of intimidation/recrimination and recent significant stressful events experienced);
- > the likely impact of recalling traumatic events on the behaviour of the witness;
- > current or previous contact with public services (including previous contact with the police, the local authority adult services or health professionals); and
- > any relevant information or intelligence known.

Race, gender, culture and ethnic background

3.62 The witness's race, gender, culture, ethnicity and first language should be given due consideration by the interviewing team. They have a responsibility to be informed about and take into account the needs and expectations of witnesses from the specific minority groups in their local area. The interviewing team's knowledge of the witness's religion, culture, customs and beliefs may have a bearing on their understanding of any account given by the witness, including the language and allusions the witness may make, for example, to reward and punishment.

3.63 The interviewing team needs to bear in mind that some families may have experienced discrimination and/or oppression through their contact with government agencies and local authorities. Their experiences of racism, for example, may result in them distrusting the professionals involved in an investigative interview (see also Box 3.4). Asylum-seeking witnesses and refugees may have a fear of disclosing abuse because of what may happen to them and their family.

3.64 It is also important that the interviewing team considers the complexities of multiple discrimination, for example in the case of a witness from a minority ethnic community who has a disability, and of individuals' experiences of discrimination. The specific needs and experiences of dual-heritage witnesses must also be taken into account.

3.65 Some possible relevant considerations include the following – although this list is in no way intended to be exhaustive:

- > customs or beliefs that could hinder the witness from participating in an interview on certain days (e.g. holy days) or may otherwise affect the witness's participation (e.g. when fasting);
- > the relationship to authority figures within different minority ethnic groups; for example, witnesses from some cultures may be expected to show respect to authority figures by not referring to them by their first names, and by not correcting or contradicting them;
- > the manner in which love and affection are demonstrated;
- > the degree to which extended family members are involved in caring for the witness;
- > the degree of emphasis placed on learning skills in independence and self-care; and
- > issues of shame; for example, carers in some cultures may inhibit the witness from talking about a sexual assault for fear of shaming the family.

3.66 A witness should be interviewed in the language of their choice. If a witness is bilingual, then this may require the use of an interpreter. The interpreter should be from the National Register of Public Service Interpreters (see paragraph 3.109).

Other life experiences

3.67 Where the witness may have experienced abuse, neglect, domestic violence and/or discrimination based on race or disability, the interviewers must consider its potential impact on the interview. There is no single 'diagnostic' symptom of abuse or discrimination, but some of the possible effects on vulnerable adult witnesses are set out in Boxes 3.3 to 3.6. When considering the possibility of abuse or discrimination, it must be understood that vulnerable adult witnesses who have experienced it will not necessarily exhibit all, or indeed any, of the behaviours set out in these boxes.

Box 3.3: Some possible effects of abuse and neglect

These include:

- > poor self-esteem;
- > post-traumatic stress disorder;
- > self-injury and suicidal behaviour;
- > increased emotional problems, e.g. anxiety and depression;
- > decreased cognitive functioning;
- > sexualised behaviour; and
- > negative social behaviour, e.g. increased aggression, non-compliance and criminal activity.

Box 3.4: Some possible effects of racism

These include:

- > fear;
- > poor self-esteem;
- > fear of betrayal of community;
- > mistrust of people from outside own community;
- > difficulty in establishing positive (racial) identity; and
- > increased vulnerability to racist abuse.

Box 3.5: Some possible effects of discrimination based on disability

These include:

- > decreased autonomy;
- > increased dependency;
- > difficulty in establishing positive self-identity;
- > experience of being isolated (geographical, physical, social);
- > experience of being patronised by people who do not have a disability;
- > experience of being treated as a 'voiceless object';
- > feelings of being perceived as 'asexual'; and
- > increased vulnerability to abuse.

Box 3.6: Some possible effects of domestic violence

These include:

- > fear for safety of self and others in family;
- > sadness/depression, possibly reflected in self-harm or suicidal tendencies;
- > anger, which may be demonstrated in aggressive behaviour;
- > negative impact on health (e.g. asthma, eczema or eating disorders); and
- > negative impact on behaviour (e.g. aggression).

3.68 It is important for interviewers to consider these matters in relation to each individual witness, rather than work from assumptions based on stereotypes. Being sensitive to such factors should contribute towards a safe and non-judgemental interview environment for the witness. It is essential that the interview process itself does not reinforce any aspects of discriminatory or abusive experiences for the witness.

Witnesses with a significant impairment of intelligence and social functioning (learning disability)

3.69 Some people with learning disabilities can be isolated and distanced from other communities, congregated together, dependent on others (learned helplessness) and waiting for 'permission' to do anything. Interviewers should try to establish what impact this kind of situation may have had on the witness and take it into account when planning the interview, preparing the witness for the interview and conducting the interview. It is essential that every possible effort is made to encourage the witness's active participation in the interview process and to ensure that they know that their contribution is valued, whatever the outcome.

3.70 It is not possible to provide advice in this document covering every form of learning disability because there are over 200 of them. Autistic spectrum disorder (autism) and Down's syndrome are simply highlighted in this section as examples. When planning and conducting interviews, it should be remembered that there will be significant variation in the abilities of individuals with autism or Down's syndrome, or with learning disabilities more generally; each witness is an individual and should be treated as such.

3.71 When interviewing witnesses with autism, best practice suggests that being aware of the following may be helpful:

- > The interviewer should try to be calm, controlled and non-expressive.
- > The witness may be frightened of emotion or shouting.
- > The witness may be fearful of unfamiliar stimuli, including noise, colour and unknown people.
- > The witness may not like people to come too close to them.
- > The witness may not like to make direct eye contact.
- > The witness may prefer a consistent and stable environment. For example, if there is more than one interview, they should be carried out in the same place, with the same people in the same positions within the room. This would also apply to the courtroom situation if they have to appear on more than one day.

3.72 Witnesses with Down's syndrome and many other people with learning disabilities might:

- > be disturbed and become anxious if there is shouting or aggression, especially if they are questioned by unknown people, particularly authority figures; and
- > be affected by noise. If they have a significant hearing loss they may, for example, confuse similar sounding words (this has particular relevance in responses to questions regarding when, where, what, why and who).

3.73 All witnesses with learning disabilities are eligible for an intermediary where the use of an intermediary would maximise the quality of their evidence (see paragraphs 3.115 to 3.120). Communication is naturally ambiguous and often depends on tone, gesture and body language as well as words. This is also the case for witnesses with learning disabilities, who may use a combination of single words, signs and gestures. It will be important to ascertain any differences in their use of language, and to identify a person who knows how the witness communicates (such as a parent, carer, adult social care social worker or speech and language therapist) to facilitate the identification of an intermediary with the appropriate skills prior to the interview.

3.74 There is also the possibility of additional physical disabilities, which might contribute to intellectual impairment and add to the difficulty of giving evidence.

3.75 Elderly witnesses may also have cognitive impairments (e.g. as a result of dementia). They may require the support of Special Measures in order to be able to give full and reliable testimony.

Witnesses with a physical disability

3.76 A physical disability may cause additional health problems. Witnesses who have associated health or mobility difficulties may benefit if their interviews are spaced out, with periods for rest and refreshment. Planning should allow for the extra time necessary. Physically disabled witnesses may need a carer on hand to give assistance with toileting, medication and drinks. Access requirements may also need additional planning. Where the witness has speech and/or hearing losses, this may require the use of an intermediary.

Witnesses with a mental disorder

3.77 Where there is a major concern about the mental health of a witness or information that suggests mental disorder, consent for an early psychiatric assessment might be sought to establish whether the witness is able to give a reliable account of events. Under the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996, any report might have to be disclosed to the defence prior to the trial as unused prosecution material.

3.78 It might also be helpful to ask the witness if they are in contact with a professional such as a doctor, adult social care social worker, community psychiatric nurse or legal representative who might be able to assist them. In some cases it may be clear either from the location of the witness (e.g. hospital) or from other information volunteered by the witness, or by one of the professionals known to the witness, that they have a mental disorder.

3.79 Witnesses with a mental disorder are eligible for an intermediary where the use of an intermediary would maximise the quality of their evidence.

Information about the alleged offence(s)

3.80 It is preferable (but not always necessary or essential) that interviewers know little detail of the alleged offence(s) for the purposes of the interview. However, in order to plan and prepare for the interview, interviewers will need a little general knowledge about:

- > the type of alleged offence(s);
- > the approximate time and location of the alleged offence(s);
- > the scene of the alleged offence(s) (note: this should only be enough general knowledge to help the interviewer understand what might be said during the interview); and
- > how the alleged offences came to the notice of the police.

3.81 Where the interviewer is also the investigating officer and has been involved in a multi-agency strategy meeting/discussion (see No Secrets – Guidance on Developing and Implementing Multi-agency Procedures to Protect Vulnerable Adults from Abuse (Department of Health, 2000), paragraph 6.13 and In Safe Hands: Implementing Adult Protection Procedures in Wales (National Assembly for Wales, 2000), paragraphs 5.1 and 8.11) or has been interviewing other witnesses during the course of an investigation, it is accepted that circumstances and practical resource considerations might be such that they are likely to know more about the alleged offence(s) than is set out in paragraph 3.80. In this situation, interviewers should try to avoid contaminating the interview process with such knowledge as far as possible.

Information important to the investigation

3.82 While obtaining an account of the alleged event is essential, other matters might need to be covered during the interview in order to progress the investigation. These matters can be regarded as ‘information important to the investigation’. Obtaining a complete picture of all the relevant issues within an interview is essential because it will provide the investigating officer with the information necessary to conduct a comprehensive investigation. It could also prove beneficial in discussions with the CPS if the subject of witness assessment is raised. Information important to the investigation falls into two categories: general investigative practice (see paragraph 3.84) and case-specific material (see paragraphs 3.85 to 3.91). Where such information important to the investigation has not already been covered as part of the witness’s account, interviewers should consider introducing it either in the latter part of the questioning phase (see paragraphs 3.194 to 3.235) or in a subsequent interview session, depending on the complexity of the case and what is alleged to have been witnessed by the interviewee.

3.83 The amount of knowledge that interviewers have about information important to the investigation prior to the interview depends on what they know about what is alleged to have been witnessed by the interviewee. As noted in paragraph 3.80, it is preferable that interviewers know little detail of the alleged offence(s) before the interview. Therefore only a little knowledge that could form the basis of potential questions about information important to the investigation is likely to be available to the interviewer at this point in time. However, while planning the interview, interviewers should apply what they know of the alleged offences to determine the areas of general investigative practice that might need to be covered in the interview. More case-specific material could be either made available to the interviewer (from the investigating officer, interview monitor or recording equipment operator), after an attempt has been made to elicit and clarify the witness’s account, or included in the planning information for a later interview to avoid potential contamination of the process.

Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice

3.84 Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice includes:

- > points to prove any alleged offence(s);
- > information that should be considered when assessing a witness’s identification evidence, as suggested in R v Turnbull and Camelo ([1976] 63 Cr App R 132) and embodied in the mnemonic ADVOKATE (Practical Guide to Investigative Interviewing (National Centre for Policing Excellence, most recent edition 2004)):
 - A Amount of time under observation
 - D Distance from the eyewitness to the person/incident
 - V Visibility – including time of day, street lighting, etc.
 - O Obstructions – anything getting in the way of the witness’s view
 - K Known or seen before – did the witness know, or had they seen, the alleged perpetrator before?
 - A Any reason to remember – was there something specific that made the person/incident memorable?
 - T Time lapse – how long since the witness last saw the alleged perpetrator?
 - E Errors or material discrepancies;
- > anything said by the witness to a third party after the incident (evidence of first complaint etc.); and
- > any other witnesses present.

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of the information important to the investigation pertaining to general investigative practice varies according to the circumstances of the case.

Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material

3.85 Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material includes:

- > how and where any items used in the commission of the offence (e.g. clothing, vehicles, weapons, cash, documents or other property) were disposed of, if the vulnerable adult witness might have some knowledge of this;
- > any background information relevant to the witness's account (e.g. matters that might enhance or detract from the credibility of the witness's evidence, such as the amount of any alcohol consumed);
- > any lifestyle information relevant to the witness's account;
- > where the witness has knowledge of an alleged victim or a suspected perpetrator, an exploration of their relationship, background history, places frequented and any events related or similar to the matter under investigation; and
- > any risk assessment issues that the witness might know about that concern the likely conduct of the alleged perpetrator, their family or associates (this should be dealt with after the witness's account has been covered to avoid confusion).

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of any case-specific material varies according to the circumstances of the alleged offence, the nature of any relationship between the witness and the alleged perpetrator, and what is alleged to have been seen, heard or otherwise experienced.

3.86 Significant evidential inconsistencies and significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information) are discrete categories of case-specific material.

Significant evidential inconsistencies

3.87 During the course of an investigation it may be necessary to ask a vulnerable adult witness to explain a significant evidential inconsistency between what they have said during the interview and other material gathered during the course of the investigation. Such inconsistencies would, for example, include significant differences between the account provided by the witness during the interview and:

- > what the witness is reported to have said on a previous occasion;
- > the accounts of other witnesses; and
- > injuries sustained by either the alleged victim or the alleged offender.

3.88 There are a number of reasons for significant evidential inconsistencies between what a witness says during an interview and other material gathered during the course of an investigation. Many of these reasons are perfectly innocent in their nature (e.g. genuine mistakes by the witness or others stemming from a memory-encoding or recall failure, or subconscious contamination of their memory by external influences) but occasions may arise where the witness is motivated to either fabricate or exaggerate their account of an event.

3.89 Whatever the reason for the significant evidential inconsistency, occasions may arise where it is necessary to ask the witness to explain it. The following principles should be taken into account when considering whether, when and how to solicit such an explanation:

- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought where the inconsistency is a significant one.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after careful consideration has concluded that there is no obvious explanation for them.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after the witness's account has been fully explored, either at the end of the interview or in a further interview, as appropriate.
- > Interviewers should always be aware that the purpose of asking a witness to explain an evidential inconsistency is to pursue the truth in respect of the matter under investigation, it is not to put pressure on a witness to alter their account.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should take account of the extent to which the witness may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence.
- > Questions intended to elicit an explanation for evidential inconsistencies should be carefully planned, phrased tactfully and presented in a non-confrontational manner.

Significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information)

3.90 During the course of an investigation it may be necessary to ask a vulnerable adult witness about relevant information that they have not mentioned in their account. This may arise, for example, where others say that the alleged offender was carrying an object, or that the alleged offender's behaviour was unusual or that there was something particular about the alleged offender's description or vehicle but this is not mentioned by the witness. There are a number of reasons why this type of information can be omitted from an account, and situations may arise where it is important to seek an explanation from the witness. In these circumstances, it may be necessary to ask a question to establish whether the witness has knowledge of the information. Such a question should only be asked after the witness's account has been fully explored, at the end of the interview (or in a further interview if necessary).

3.91 When planning such a question, the interviewer should consider:

- > whether the information omitted by the witness is likely to be important enough to be worthy of explanation;
- > the extent to which the witness may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence; and
- > which type of question is most likely to elicit the information in a manner that will not have an adverse effect on the value of any answer.

A plan for soliciting an explanation for the omission of case-relevant information from a witness's account must consider the reliability of any answer. For example, a useful starting point might be to ask the witness a specific-closed question, such as: 'What else can you tell me about the incident?' If the witness's answer:

- > includes the case-relevant information but lacks sufficient detail, the interviewer should ask the witness to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'). When the case-relevant information has been covered, the witness should be tactfully asked to explain its omission from their account, unless the reason for its omission is apparent from the witness's response or the circumstances of the case; or
- > does not include the case-relevant information, a further decision will need to be made as to whether it is necessary to ask a question that might be regarded as leading (e.g. 'Do you recall seeing/hearing...?'). It should be noted that if the answer to such a leading question contains the case-relevant information, it is likely to be of limited evidential value. The evidential value of such an answer may, however, be enhanced if the interviewer then asks the witness to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'), followed by questions intended tactfully to elicit an explanation for its omission from their account (unless the reason for the omission is apparent from the witness's response or the circumstances of the case).

Where the witness cannot recall the case-relevant information, this may be due to not attending to the information or to memory loss. Further reading on case-relevant information can be found in The Evaluation of the Investigation and Legal Process Involving Child Abuse Offences to Establish a Model of Investigation for Investigators by K.B. Marlow (unpublished MSc thesis, Portsmouth, 2002).

Using the planning information

3.92 The planning information should then be used to:

- > set aims and objectives for the interview;
- > determine the techniques used within the phased interview; and
- > decide:
 - the means by which the interview is to be recorded;
 - who should conduct the interview and if anybody else should be present (including social support for the interviewee);
 - if anybody should monitor the interview (e.g. investigating officer, supervising officer, specialist/interview adviser, etc.) and who will operate the equipment;
 - the location of the interview;
 - the timing of the interview;
 - the duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session); and
 - what is likely to happen after the interview.

Aims and objectives

3.93 Setting clear aims and objectives is important because they give direction to the interview and contribute to its structure. The interview aims and objectives should focus on trying to establish what happened prior to, during and after the alleged event(s), including the details of all the physical and verbal interactions that took place between the witness and the alleged perpetrator(s) and between the witness and anybody else. The interview aims and objectives should also take account of any suspected attempt to stop the witness from talking to the police or any other agency or person.

Techniques

3.94 The kind of techniques used within the phased structure set out in Part 3B will vary according to what is known about the witness and the offence when planning the interview, as well as how the witness behaves and what emerges during the interview itself. For example, it might be productive to make use of some of the cognitive mnemonics referred to in paragraph 3.253 within the phased interview approach with a direct witness who is able and willing to participate in the process, whereas such techniques are unlikely to be productive while a witness remains hostile and less co-operative and where a more managed communication is necessary.

How the interview is to be recorded

3.95 Any decision as to the form of the witness's statement, whether as a video-recorded interview or a written statement, will need to be taken on an individual basis, taking into account information and any expert opinion that is available. One important factor would be the presence of any memory disabilities. If the witness has unusual difficulties in retrieving past events readily, then an early video-recorded interview may be advisable. Likewise, if a witness is likely to suffer undue stress in giving evidence-in-chief live in the courtroom, a video-recorded statement may again be preferable.

3.96 All decisions need to take account of the witness's own expressed preferences as to the form of their statement.

3.97 Regardless of how the interview is recorded, notes should always be taken that are sufficiently detailed to assist the investigating officer to determine any further lines of enquiry that might be necessary and to brief the custody officer and any other interviewers where a suspected perpetrator is in custody. Responsibility for the compilation of such notes should be agreed during the planning phase of the interview. This responsibility should fall to the interview monitor, where they are in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment, or the recording equipment operator. While interviewers should consider taking brief notes to assist them during the free narrative phase of the interview, where this is appropriate, they should not be responsible for taking notes for the purposes of briefing others because it is likely to distract the witness, obstruct the flow of recall and slow the interview process down, thus hindering the maximum retrieval of information.

Interviewers and others present at the interview

The interviewer

3.98 The investigating team should consider who is best qualified to conduct the interview and whether there should be an interview monitor present to support that interviewer.

3.99 The witness's gender, race, culture and ethnicity must always be given due consideration and advice sought where necessary, but stereotypic conclusions about who is to conduct the interview should be avoided. Where the witness expresses a particular preference for an interviewer of either gender or sexual orientation or from a particular race, cultural or ethnic background this should be accommodated as far as is practical in the circumstances.

3.100 A special blend of skills is required to lead video-recorded interviews. The lead interviewer should be a person who has, or is likely to be able to establish, rapport with the interviewee and who understands how to communicate effectively with those with disabilities or disorder, including in disturbed periods. The lead interviewer should also have a proper grasp of the rules of evidence and investigatively important information, including the points needed to prove particular offences, and be willing to attend court to give evidence.

3.101 In addition to taking account of the prospective interviewer's skills, the following factors should be taken into consideration when considering who should conduct the interview:

- > the experience of the prospective interviewer in talking to witnesses in respect of the type of offence under investigation and any other skills that they possess that could be useful;
- > any personal or domestic issues that the prospective interviewer has that might have an adverse impact on the interview; and
- > whether any previous experience that the prospective interviewer has with the witness is likely to either inhibit rapport building or give rise to challenges of coaching, prompting or offering inducements.

3.102 The decision as to who will lead the interview should only be made after a full discussion of the issues raised above. If assessment prior to the interview or other contact with the interviewee has already taken place, it may be clear who in the investigation team has established a better rapport with the interviewee; provided that person has been adequately trained in interviewing adults with disabilities or disorders, this should help decide the lead interviewer.

3.103 The interviewer should consider the appropriate mode of dress for the particular interviewee. For example, research shows that a person's perceived authority can have an adverse effect on the interviewee, especially with respect to suggestibility.

3.104 Exceptionally, it may be in the interests of the witness to be interviewed by somebody that they are already confident with but who is not a member of the investigating team. Provided that such a person has appropriate professional qualifications, is independent and impartial, is not a party to the proceedings, is prepared to co-operate with appropriately trained interviewers and can accept adequate briefing (including permitted questioning techniques), this possibility should not be precluded.

The interview monitor

3.105 The presence of an interview monitor is desirable because they can help to ensure that the interview is conducted in a professional manner, can assist in identifying any gaps that emerge in the witness's account, and can ensure that the witness's needs are kept paramount. Careful consideration needs to be made with regard to whether the interview monitor is present in the interviewing room itself (in which event they might effectively be regarded as being a 'second interviewer'), or in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment (in which case they might effectively be regarded as being an 'observer'). The possibility that the witness might feel intimidated by the presence of too many people in the interview room should be taken into account in determining where an interview monitor is situated, particularly where an interview supporter and interpreter are also to be present in the interview room.

3.106 Regardless of who takes the lead, the interviewing team should have a clear and shared remit for the role of the interview monitor. Too often this role is subjugated to the need for someone to operate the video equipment, when, in reality, the interview monitor has a vital role in observing the lead interviewer's questioning and the witness's demeanour. The interview monitor should be alert to interviewer errors and to apparent confusions in the communication between the lead interviewer and the witness. The interview monitor can reflect back to the planning discussions and communicate with the lead interviewer as necessary. Such observation and monitoring can be essential to the overall clarity and completeness of the video-recorded account, which will be especially important at court.

Equipment operators

3.107 The equipment should always have an operator for the duration of the interview. This will allow the view recorded by the camera to be adjusted if the witness moves. It should also provide an opportunity for the interviewer to be alerted at the earliest possible moment in the event of an equipment failure rather than such a failure only being discovered at the end of the interview (see also Appendix H).

Interpreters

3.108 Witnesses should always be interviewed in the language of their choice, unless exceptional circumstances prevail (for example, in respect of the availability of interpreters). This will normally be the witness's first language, unless specific circumstances result in their second language being more appropriate. Interviewers should be aware that some witnesses could be perfectly fluent in English, but might use their first language to express intimate or more complex concepts. As a result, the possibility of using an interpreter should be considered while planning the interview even where a witness is bilingual.

3.109 Interpreters should be appropriately accredited and trained so that they understand the need to avoid altering the meaning of questions and replies. They should normally be selected from the National Register of Public Service Interpreters or the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People (CACDP) National Directory of Sign Language Interpreters. If it is not possible to select an interpreter from these registers then the interpreter may be chosen from some other list, provided that the interpreter meets standards at least equal to those required for entry onto the National or CACDP registers, in terms of academic qualification and proven experience of interpreting within the criminal justice system. All interpreters need to be independent, impartial and unbiased. Family members or other close relatives should not be used either during the interview or when preparing the witness for it.

3.110 Interpreters should be involved in the planning process. They should have a clear understanding of the objectives of the interview, its structure and the function served by any specific techniques used (e.g. those of the cognitive interview). It should be remembered that some words in English might not have an exact equivalent in other languages and communication systems. This possibility should, therefore, be discussed while planning the interview, with a view to developing strategies to address what might otherwise be a problem.

3.111 If interviewers are working with an interpreter, it is important to have clarified at the outset who will lead the interview in terms of maintaining direct communication with the witness. If the witness is communicating via an interpreter, the lead interviewer should identify themselves as such while maintaining appropriate eye contact with the witness so that the witness understands that they should address the interviewer, not the interpreter. However, if a signer is being used to communicate with a witness who has a hearing impairment, it may be more important for the signer to maintain the direct communication with the witness.

3.112 Where an interpreter is present, they must be clearly identified at the beginning of the interview. Whenever possible, they should also be visible in one of the shots recorded.

3.113 Where a signer is being used to interpret for a witness with a hearing impairment, a camera should be used to record the signer's hand movements as well as those of the witness. In some interview suites, it might be necessary to make use of a portable camera, in addition to the static equipment already set up in the suite, for this purpose.

3.114 Where a signer is to be used, it is important to remember that the energy involved in signing is such that the hands of the signer and the witness are likely to get tired. The interview plan should therefore take account of the need for breaks to give the signer and the witness an opportunity to rest their hands.

Intermediaries

3.115 An intermediary may be able to help improve the quality of evidence of any vulnerable adult witness who is unable to detect and cope with misunderstanding, or to clearly express their answers to questions, especially in the context of an interview or while giving evidence in court. The information provided here is intended to summarise the role of the intermediary and provide general principles that need to be considered in criminal investigations. Detailed procedural guidance and a case checklist can be found in the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005).

3.116 Even though Section 29 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 makes it clear that an intermediary can assist a witness to communicate by explaining questions put to and answers given by a vulnerable witness, this happens rarely in practice. It is more common for intermediaries to assist during the planning phase of an interview by providing advice on how questions should be asked and then to intervene during the interview where miscommunication is likely, by assisting the interviewer to rephrase the question or by repeating the witness's answers where they might otherwise be inaudible or unclear on the recording. The extent to which the intermediary is actively involved in the communication of questions and answers will vary from witness to witness depending on the witness's particular needs and communication style. It will also depend on the degree of compliance with the intermediary's recommendations by the questioner. It is very important to remember that the intermediary is there only to assist communication and understanding – they are not allowed to take on the function of investigator.

3.117 An Intermediary Registration Board (IRB) has been established by the OCJR. The IRB oversees registration of intermediaries and their standards. Registered Intermediaries are accredited by the IRB and OCJR following a selection and training process assessed against a set of core competencies required for the intermediary role. Registered Intermediaries are checked periodically at the Criminal Records Bureau enhanced disclosure level. Details of how to access the intermediary register are set out in the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005).

3.118. Before an intermediary can assist with communication they need to conduct one or more assessment meetings with the witness. The criminal case is not discussed during assessment meetings. These meetings enable the intermediary to consider the witness's communication needs and devise strategies and recommendations for how to maximise understanding. The meetings also enable the intermediary to build the necessary rapport with the witness and to determine whether they (the intermediary) are the right person to act as an intermediary for that witness. Intermediaries should never be alone with a witness; a responsible third party, as defined by procedural guidelines (Section 2 of the Intermediary Procedural Guidance Manual (Office for Criminal Justice Reform, 2005)) must be present. This should usually be a police officer at the investigation stage.

3.119 Registered Intermediaries should be used. The use of an unregistered person as intermediary can only be considered once the options for using a Registered Intermediary have been exhausted. When this is the case, an unregistered intermediary has the same responsibility to the court. They must be independent of the case being investigated (i.e. not witnesses or suspects). There is a preference for unregistered intermediaries to be professional people rather than family members, friends or associates. In the event that the particular circumstances of the case are such that it appears that only a non-professional person can perform the function of an intermediary, it is important that the witness is assessed by a Registered Intermediary before proceeding, in order to confirm that the role can only be performed by the non-professional. A briefing pack to be used by unregistered intermediaries, setting out the role of the intermediary, is available from the OCJR.

3.120 Discussions with the intermediary at the planning stage should include the arrangements for leading the interview, legal and confidentiality requirements, and the exact role that the intermediary will take. The potentially explicit nature of the topics to be covered should be addressed. The intermediary should be provided with information that is relevant to their role and will help them to maximise communication/understanding (e.g. the specific vocabulary used by the witness and relevant relationships).

Interview supporters

3.121 It may often be helpful for a person who is known to the witness to be present during the interview to provide emotional support (the 'interview supporter'). They may also be able to offer extra information regarding the particular communication needs of the witness. However, in some circumstances it has been found that the use of a person who is well-known to the witness as an interview supporter can prove counterproductive by inhibiting the disclosure of information (e.g. as a result of embarrassment arising from sensitive information being disclosed in the presence of a person seen by the witness on a day-to-day basis). For this reason, discussions as to the identity of any potential interview supporter should take account of the nature of their relationship with the witness and its potential impact on the interview process. Wherever possible, the views of the witness should be established prior to the interview as to whether they wish another person to be present and, if so, who this should be.

3.122 Other witnesses in the case, including those giving evidence of an early complaint, cannot act as interview supporters.

3.123 If an interpreter or intermediary is included, then they will need to be distinct from the interview supporter and these different functions should not be vested in one person.

3.124 Interview supporters must be clearly told that their role is limited to providing emotional support and that they must not prompt or speak for the witness, especially on any matters relevant to the investigation.

3.125 Where an interview supporter is present, they must be clearly identified at the beginning of the interview. Whenever possible they should also be visible in one of the angles recorded. Best practice would be for the interview supporter to make sure they are outside of the witness's line of vision, for example by sitting on the opposite side of the witness to the interviewer.

Location of the interview

3.126 Active consideration should be given to the location of the interview and to the layout of the room in which it is to take place. In the planning phase the interviewer should attempt to determine where the witness would prefer to be interviewed. Some witnesses may be happy to be interviewed in an interview suite, while others might prefer to be interviewed in a setting familiar and comfortable to them. Whatever the decision, the location should be quiet enough to avoid a situation in which background noise is likely to interfere with the quality of the sound on any visual or audio record, free from interruptions, free from distractions, and free from fear and intimidation so the interviewer and interviewee can concentrate fully on the task in hand: the interview.

3.127 Interviewers should ensure that sufficient pens and paper are available for use where a witness's recall could be assisted by drawing sketches/plans (NB: it is important to remember that any sketches/plans, etc. drawn in the interview will need to be retained so that they can either be adduced as evidence or disclosed as unused material under the terms of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996).

3.128 In the event of a witness being interviewed at their home address, care should be taken to avoid saying anything or video-recording any background material that might lead to the location being identified (the use of background screens should be considered if necessary).

Timing of the interview

3.129 The decision when to conduct an interview needs to take account of the demands of the investigation (e.g. a suspected perpetrator being in custody) as well as the potential effects of trauma and/or stress. Trauma and stress can interfere with the process of remembering, but this should be determined by asking the witness rather than by the application of an arbitrary period of time. Some witnesses will want to be interviewed relatively quickly while others might wish to be interviewed at a later date. It should always be borne in mind that the potential for memory contamination taking place increases with the delay.

3.130 Interviews should not take place at a time when the witness is likely to be suffering from the effects of fatigue (other than in the exceptional circumstances mentioned in paragraph 3.131). The effect of the witness's routine and the potential impact of any medication, as well as their views, must be taken into account in determining the best time to conduct the interview.

3.131 In the event of circumstances being such that it is absolutely essential for a witness to be interviewed at a time when they are likely to be suffering the effects of fatigue (for example, where an alleged offender is in police custody for a serious offence and an interview is necessary to secure potentially vital evidence), consideration may be given to conducting a brief interview in the first instance which sets out the witness's account and addresses any issues on which immediate action needs to be taken. Where it is necessary to conduct a brief interview, the principles set out in paragraph 3.18 should be adhered to. A more substantial interview can then be arranged at an appropriate time.

Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)

3.132 Whenever possible, the interviewer should in the preparation and planning stage seek advice from people who know the witness about the likely length of time that the witness can be interviewed before a pause or break is offered, and breaks should be offered or taken during the interview in accordance with this information. If there is an accompanying interviewer, this person can share responsibility with the lead interviewer concerning the active use of pauses and breaks. For some vulnerable witnesses there will be a need to plan for several pauses/breaks and for the interview to be spread over more than one day. When this occurs, care must be taken to avoid repetition of the same focused questions over time, which could lead to unreliable or inconsistent responding in some witnesses and interviews being ruled inadmissible by the court.

3.133 As well as being less able to concentrate for as long as other witnesses, some vulnerable witnesses may find that the experience of being interviewed is 'too much' for them, especially if emotional matters are being dealt with. Ways of assisting such witnesses may include planning for breaks in the interview and/or pauses in which the interviewer moves the conversation on to more neutral topics (e.g. those mentioned in the rapport phase – see paragraph 3.164) before returning to the matter under investigation.

Planning for immediately after the interview

3.134 Although interviewers cannot predict the course of an interview, planning discussions should cover the different possible outcomes and consider the implications for the witness. This should include the possibility of a medical examination (where this has not taken place before the interview), the possible need for alternative accommodation and any other steps necessary to protect the witness or reduce the possibility of harassment.

Witnesses who might become suspects

3.135 So far as is practicable, consideration should be given in the planning stage as to how interviewers will deal with any confessions to criminal offences made by the witness in the course of the interview. Any decision on an appropriate course of action will involve taking into account the seriousness of the crime admitted and weighing it against the seriousness of the crime under investigation.

3.136 It is preferable to anticipate and plan for such an eventuality while recognising that any decisions on a particular course of action are likely to depend upon what has been disclosed by the witness during the course of the interview (see paragraphs 3.263 to 3.267 for guidance in respect of incriminating statements made by witnesses during interviews).

Recording the planning process

3.137 A full written record should be kept of the decisions made during the planning process and of the information and rationale underpinning them. This record should be referred to in the body of the Section 9 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement subsequently made by the interviewer in relation to the planning, preparation and conduct of the interview and should be revealed to the CPS under the requirements of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996.

Preparing the witness for an interview

3.138 Witnesses should always be prepared for an interview. In some cases this preparation might be fairly brief, but some vulnerable witnesses may be very unused to speaking to strangers and may well need to spend time getting to know the interviewer before they are ready and/or willing to take part in an investigative interview. This familiarisation process may take some time (e.g. hours in some cases) and therefore, in their preparation, interviewers need to consider whether one (or more) meetings with a witness should be planned to take place prior to the investigative interview.

3.139 In some instances it may be helpful to arrange a familiarisation visit to the interview suite for the witness as part of the preparation process.

3.140 The preparation of the witness should include an explanation of the purpose of the interview and the reason for video-recording it (including who might subsequently view it), the role of the interviewer(s) and anybody else to be present, the location of the interview and roughly how long it is likely to take. The interviewer(s) should also outline the general structure of the interview and provide some explanation of the ground rules that apply to it (including the witness not making any assumptions about the interviewer's knowledge of the event). Substantive issues relating to the evidence should not be discussed while preparing a witness for an interview.

3.141 Any issues or concerns raised by the witness should be addressed while preparing them for the interview (for example, welfare issues or concerns about the possibility of a later court appearance).

3.142 Assistance should be sought if necessary from interview supervisors and interview advisers (tiers 4 and 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers' (ACPO's) Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)) with the issues that might arise during the preparation of a witness for an interview.

3.143 Full written notes must be kept of the preparation of a witness for an interview and must be revealed to the CPS.

3.144 The plan for the interview should be reviewed and revised if necessary in the light of any additional information that arises from preparing the witness for the interview.

Sharing information with carers

3.145 Adult witnesses have the right to privacy, including the right to choose to provide information that they do not wish to share with their carer. Thus, account needs to be taken of their understanding when considering whether their carer also needs to be consulted. The same considerations apply in relation to seeking further information from the carer after a vulnerable adult has made their own statement.

Victim Personal Statements

3.146 Interviewers should plan to give vulnerable witnesses who are victims the opportunity to make a Victim Personal Statement (VPS) at the end of the interview. The purpose of a VPS is to give a victim of crime the chance to say what effect the crime has had on them and to help identify their need for information and support. The statement should be taken in the same format as the witness statement: for example where a video-recorded interview has taken place the VPS should also be video-recorded. For further details of the scheme see Home Office Circular 35/2001.

3.147 Providing a VPS (video-recorded or written) is entirely voluntary. Witnesses should be provided with an explanation about what a VPS is and how it can be used/cannot be used, to help them make an informed choice as to whether they provide a VPS or not.

3.148. In the first instance, vulnerable witnesses should be given the opportunity to make the statement themselves, but in some circumstances, for example those with a learning disability, it may be appropriate for their carer to provide the statement on the victim's behalf. In some cases it may be necessary to take a statement from both the victim and the carer, in order to establish a full picture of the impact of their experience.

3.149 In cases where the witness statement has been taken in the form of a video-recorded interview, it is preferable for the VPS to follow on the same recording but there must be a clear break between the two. This can be achieved by dividing the two statements with a still image, for example the police force logo. Alternatively or additionally, the interviewer may make a statement on the recording acknowledging the change from the evidential interview to the VPS.

3.150 There is always the possibility that, at a later time, the victim or their carer may feel that the impact of the experience has been such that a second statement is needed. Unless there are exceptional circumstances, a second statement should be taken in a written format according to the Home Office guidance on Victim Personal Statements.

Part 3B: Interviewing vulnerable adult witnesses

Aims

By the end of Part 3B those involved in conducting interviews with vulnerable witnesses should be able to consider, with respect to each individual case:

- > interviewer behaviour (paragraphs 3.157 to 3.160);
- > pace of interviews and the need for breaks (paragraphs 3.161 and 3.162);
- > establishing rapport (paragraphs 3.163 to 3.174);
- > oaths and the importance of telling the truth (paragraphs 3.175 to 3.177);
- > free narrative (paragraphs 3.178 to 3.183);
- > compliance and acquiescence (paragraphs 3.184 to 3.193);
- > styles of questioning (paragraphs 3.194 to 3.227);
- > understanding what the witness is trying to convey (paragraphs 3.228 and 3.229);
- > topic selection (paragraphs 3.230 and 3.231);
- > misleading statements (paragraphs 3.232 to 3.235);
- > closing the interview (paragraphs 3.236 to 3.243);
- > evaluating the interview (paragraphs 3.244 to 3.246);
- > post-interview documentation and storage of recordings (paragraphs 3.247 and 3.248);
- > further interviews (paragraph 3.250);
- > identification procedures (paragraph 3.251);
- > therapeutic help for vulnerable adult witnesses (paragraph 3.252);
- > the cognitive interview (paragraphs 3.253 to 3.256); and
- > special interviewing techniques (paragraphs 3.257 to 3.259).

General advice on interviewing vulnerable adult witnesses

3.151 What follows is a recommended procedure for interviewing based on a phased approach. This treats the interview as a process in which a variety of interviewing techniques are deployed in relatively specific and discrete phases, proceeding from free narrative to open and then to more closed forms of questioning. It is suggested that this approach is likely to achieve the basic aim of allowing the witness to provide an account. This structure should also result in a hierarchy of reliability of the information elicited. However, inclusion of a phased approach in this guidance should not be taken to imply that all other techniques are necessarily unacceptable or to preclude their development. Neither should what follows be regarded as a checklist to be rigidly worked through. Nevertheless, the sound legal framework it provides should not be departed from by interviewers unless they have discussed and agreed the reasons for doing so with their senior manager(s) or an interview adviser (tier 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers' (ACPO's) Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)).

3.152 Much more professional experience and published research now exist on the topic of conducting appropriate investigative interviews with children than with other vulnerable groups. Nevertheless, as for all witnesses, interviews with vulnerable people should normally consist of the following four main phases:

- > establish rapport;
- > seek free narrative recall;
- > ask questions; and
- > closure.

Each phase will be described in greater detail below. These phases are compatible with and underpin the PEACE interview framework advocated by ACPO.

3.153 The additional planning phase, which will have occurred prior to the actual interview and which will often need to be extensive, should provide guidance to the interviewer about what might be achieved in each of the four main phases of the interview (e.g. 'Is the witness able to communicate via free recall?'). No interview should be conducted without there having been prior, proper planning.

3.154 Although currently our knowledge is limited concerning how best to interview vulnerable witnesses, some of the difficulties that research and best practice have noted for vulnerable interviewees illustrate the less obvious difficulties that ordinary witnesses experience. Interviewing practices and procedures that diminish difficulties for ordinary witnesses are likely to do so for vulnerable witnesses and vice versa.

3.155 While research has found that the accounts of some types of vulnerable witnesses are less complete than those of other witnesses, these are not necessarily less accurate if the interviewing is conducted appropriately. A fundamental consideration when interviewing vulnerable witnesses is to determine whether the necessary communication aids are in place. Otherwise, it may be wrongly decided that the person does not have the communication skills necessary to proceed.

3.156 The interviewer will need to pitch the language and concepts used (see below) to a level that the witness can clearly understand, while the focus should be on recognising and working with the witness's capabilities rather than limitations.

Interviewer behaviour

3.157 Many interviewers will not be very familiar with the various types of vulnerable witnesses. Research has made it clear that when people meet others with whom they are unfamiliar their own behaviour becomes abnormal. This unusual behaviour is often noted by vulnerable people, who may view it as a sign of our discomfort. When planning an interview, interviewers should always plan to monitor their own behaviour throughout the interview and to try to keep it as normal as circumstances allow. The planning should, in this regard, especially focus on how the interviewer will manage the opening minutes of the interview. The planning should also have dealt with the issue of the interviewer being conversant with the appropriate terms to use with interviewees for various vulnerabilities/disabilities so that interviewers will not be uneasy/tense about using such terminology (when necessary) in the presence of the interviewee and so that the interviewee will not be caused unease by inappropriate use of terminology.

3.158 Interviewers must be aware that in order to gather accurate information from a vulnerable witness they have to be sensitive not only to the communication needs of the witness but also to their own impact on the interview. They should try to focus on the witness as a person rather than on the vulnerability. For many people with disabilities the disability is not central to their self-concept. Interviewers should try to avoid being uncomfortable or unsure how to behave with someone who has a disability that they have not encountered before. Interviewers will often need to behave in a reassuring and sympathetic way but they should avoid behaving in ways that vulnerable witnesses may find demeaning or insincere or patronising.

3.159 Some vulnerable witnesses may choose to place themselves nearer to or further away from the interviewer than do other witnesses, and interviewers need to be aware of their own reactions to this. They also need to be aware that while they may intentionally try to act in a friendly and helpful way to vulnerable witnesses, they may at the same time unwittingly be giving off contradictory signals of unease and/or embarrassment, anxiety, insecurity, and so on, including feelings about their own incompetence. Furthermore, some vulnerable witnesses may present circumstances in which the interviewer's usual methods of social interaction are likely to fail.

3.160 Consideration should be given to the different forms of bodily expression and communication that many vulnerable witnesses will have. A proportion of vulnerable witnesses will be experienced at communicating with strangers. Interviewers can benefit from this expertise by asking such witnesses for advice concerning how they (i.e. the interviewers) should behave. Doing so will also allow the witness to feel empowered by their exerting some control in the interview. Feelings of empowerment by the witness may have the added benefit of reducing over-compliance during questioning (see paragraphs 3.184 to 3.189).

Pace and breaks

Pace

3.161 Many vulnerable witnesses will require that their interviewers go at a slower pace than do other witnesses. This is because many of them will have a slower rate of understanding and/or thinking and/or replying than other witnesses. Both research and best practice have found that interviewers will need to:

- > slow down their speech rate;
- > allow extra time for the witness to take in what has just been said;
- > provide time for the witness to prepare a response;
- > be patient if the witness replies slowly, especially if an intermediary is being used;
- > avoid immediately posing the next question;
- > avoid filling in the answers to questions for the interviewee; and
- > avoid interrupting.

The interview should go at the pace of the witness.

Breaks

3.162 Not only will interviews with vulnerable witnesses typically be conducted at a slower pace than with other witnesses, these interviews will usually involve more breaks and pauses. Many vulnerable witnesses will not be able to concentrate for as long a time as can other witnesses, and some of them will also require regular comfort breaks. Where appropriate, the interviewer should agree with the witness a simple sign (e.g. the use of a special card) that the witness can use to request a break. This will also help to empower the witness and might help to reduce any power differential that they perceive in the interaction.

Phase one: establishing rapport (including engaging and explaining)

Explaining the formalities

3.163 Firstly, it is necessary when video-recording the interview to check that the equipment is turned on and that all people in the room can be clearly seen on the monitor through the camera with the wide-angle lens where two cameras are in use (see Appendix H). Next, the interviewer should say out loud the day, date, time and place (not the detailed address) of the interview and give the relevant details of all those present.

Building rapport

3.164 A substantial rapport phase will allow the interviewer to become more familiar with the witness's preferred method of communicating and to become more competent with this method. The focus should be on the witness's ability rather than disability. This phase should allow earlier decisions made during the planning phase to be revised as necessary. Explanation can be provided as to the nature of a video-recorded interview and the role of the interpreter or intermediary if they are to be present.

3.165 Another major aim of the rapport phase is to help the witness, and indeed the interviewer, to relax and feel as comfortable as possible. Typically, the witness should be invited to discuss 'neutral' events in their life (for example, interests or hobbies where this is appropriate for that witness). The use of open-ended questions at this stage, if appropriate, should train the interviewee at the outset that detail is required. It will be as if they were 'teach them to talk at length'. It is at this stage in the interview that the interviewer can supplement their knowledge of the interviewee's social, emotional and cognitive development. This should help an interviewer to adapt their style (questions and use of language) of interviewing to the needs of the interviewee. As interviewers become more familiar with interviewing vulnerable witnesses, they may become tempted to shorten their rapport phases. This temptation should be resisted since while the interviewer may now be more familiar with such interviews, the witnesses will not be.

3.166 At an early point in the rapport phase the interviewer should briefly mention the reason for the interview in a way that does not refer directly to an alleged offence. For example, it could be appropriate for the interviewer to say that they would like to talk about something that the witness has already told someone else or because something seems to have been making the witness unhappy. Interviewers should be aware that while some interviewees will, from the outset, be very clear concerning what the interview is about, other interviewees will not.

3.167 Some witnesses may feel that their initial, lawful co-operation with a person who subsequently committed an offence may make them blameworthy. The interviewer should also bear in mind that some vulnerable witnesses will assume that because they are being interviewed they must have done something wrong. The interviewer might need to reassure the witness on this point, but promises or predictions should not be made about the likely outcome of the interview. So far as possible, the interview should be conducted in a 'neutral' atmosphere, with the interviewer taking care not to assume, or appear to assume, the guilt of an individual whose alleged conduct may be the subject of the interview.

3.168 Being interviewed is an unusual occurrence for most people who, in addition, are probably unused to conversing with someone who could be questioning what they are communicating. This is particularly so in an interview with a stranger who is also in authority. A witness could enter the interview confused about its purpose, anxious about its process and outcome, and possibly distressed by prior events. Also, some witnesses may not comprehend why they are being interviewed about embarrassing, painful experiences they may have been told to keep quiet about.

3.169 Some witnesses may be unhappy or feel shame or resentment about being questioned, especially on personal matters. In the rapport phase, and throughout the interview, the interviewer should convey to the witness that they have respect and sympathy for how the witness feels. A witness may be apprehensive about what may happen after the interview if they do provide an account of what happened. Such worries should be addressed.

3.170 It may be that some vulnerable witnesses do not perceive the need to produce full and detailed accounts of their experiences since this may not normally be required by the people around them in their normal environment. Thus the need for a full account should be explained without putting undue pressure on the witness. When discussing 'neutral' events the interviewee can be encouraged, if appropriate, to provide free recall and to appreciate that it is the interviewee who has the information. It may well prove problematic to attempt to proceed with an interview until rapport has been established. Some witnesses are not used to relating to strangers. Indeed, many are taught not to do so. Should establishing rapport prove difficult, it may be preferable to postpone the interview rather than proceeding with an interview that may well turn out to be of no benefit.

Ground rules

3.171 The interviewer should provide an explanation of the outline of the interview that is appropriate to the abilities of the witness. Typically, the outline will take the form of the interviewer asking the witness to give a free narrative account of what they remember and following this with a few questions in order to clarify what has been said. Witnesses should also be told that:

- > if the interviewer asks a question they do not understand or asks a question that they do not know the answer to, they should say so; and
- > if the interviewer misunderstands what they have said or summarises what has been said incorrectly, then they should point this out.

3.172 It should be explained that the interviewer might take a few brief notes.

3.173 It should be made clear that the witness can ask for a break at any time. These may be required more frequently than with other witnesses. Practice suggests that 20 minutes is likely to be the maximum period that most witnesses with learning disabilities are able to concentrate. In order for witnesses to have some control over a request for a break and yet not have to make a verbal request, a 'touch card' can be useful; that is, a card is placed beside witnesses which they can touch when they want a break. The break can provide an opportunity for refreshment. Such breaks should never be used as an inducement to witnesses.

3.174 Interviewers should be aware that asking someone to provide information frankly and in detail about personal matters (e.g. involving sex) is asking the person to discuss something in a manner they have learned to avoid. The interviewer should inform the witness why they are being asked to give a detailed account and that doing so, in that situation, is not breaking with convention. Interviewers should also be aware that some interviewees may prefer, initially, to write rather than say aloud sensitive words or phrases.

Oaths and the importance of telling the truth

3.175 Where a decision is taken to record an interview with a vulnerable witness on video, there should be no attempt to get the witness to swear an oath, either before or after an interview. If the witness goes on to give evidence at court, the court will decide whether an oath should be administered retrospectively or whether the witness is to give evidence unsworn (see Chapter 6).

3.176 Where there is an issue as to whether the vulnerable witness understands the value and importance of telling the truth, the interviewer can obtain assurances from the witness on these points, as is current practice for child witnesses (see Part 2B). Note that these procedures should only be employed where questions regarding witness competency might be raised at trial. This is not an issue for all adult witnesses who have disabilities or a mental disorder.

3.177 In those cases where discussion of truth and lies is appropriate, it is important to demonstrate that the witness understands the difference between the two. The witness could be asked to give examples of truth and lies. If this is not possible, the interviewer can ask some questions about this difference. If such questions are asked, they should follow the guidance set out elsewhere on styles of questioning, and focus on an intent to deceive rather than mere mistakes (NB: where the use of the examples set out in Chapter 2, Box 2.10 is contemplated, they should be modified in a way appropriate to the witness's communication). After such questions, it is appropriate to conclude with a statement like: 'Please tell me all you can remember about what happened. Don't make anything up or leave anything out. It is very important to tell the truth.'

Phase two: initiating and supporting a free narrative account

3.178 Witnesses will normally expect the interviewer, who is usually an authority figure to them, to control the interview. However, a witness interview requires that information flows from the witness to the interviewer. Some vulnerable witnesses will be under the false impression that the interviewer already knows much or all that happened and that their role, being eager to please, is merely to confirm this. It is crucial that interviewers inform witnesses, in ways that the latter understand, that (i) they were not present at the event(s), (ii) they do not yet know what occurred, and (iii) supplying detail is important.

3.179 If it is deemed appropriate, having established rapport, to continue with the interview then the witness should be asked when possible to provide in their own words an account of the relevant event(s) (note that the purpose of the interview should have been appropriately explained to the witness during the rapport phase). Only the most general open-ended questions should be asked in this phase as guidance to the witness concerning the general area of life experience relevant to the investigation (e.g. 'Do you know why you are here today?'; 'Is there anything that you would like to tell me?'). This type of question is one that enquires in a non-specific manner. If the witness responds in a positive way to such questions then the interviewer can encourage the witness to give a free narrative account of events. During this phase the interviewer's role is to act as a facilitator, not an interrogator. Research findings consistently have shown that improper questioning of vulnerable people is a greater source of distortion of their accounts than are memory deficits. Therefore, it is essential to avoid using imperfect questioning in the early parts of an interview. Every effort must be made to obtain information from the witness that is spontaneous and uncontaminated by the interviewer (appropriate methods for questioning witnesses are described in paragraphs 3.195 to 3.227).

3.180 In the free narrative phase the interviewer should encourage witnesses to provide an account 'in their own words' by the use of non-specific prompts such as 'Did anything else happen?', 'Is there more you can tell me?' and 'Can you put it another way to help me understand better?' Verbs like 'tell' and 'explain' are likely to be useful. The prompts used at this stage should not include information known to the interviewer concerning relevant events that have not yet been communicated by the witness. Research has found that in their free narrative accounts vulnerable witnesses usually provide less information than do other people. Nevertheless, this information may be no less accurate. However, it is vulnerable people whose accounts are likely to be most tainted by inappropriate questioning.

3.181 Many witnesses when recalling negative events may initially be more comfortable with peripheral matters and may only want to move on to more central matters when they feel this to be appropriate. Therefore, interviewers should resist the temptation prematurely to 'get to the heart of the matter'. They should also resist the temptation to speak as soon as the witness appears to stop doing so, and should be tolerant of pauses, including long ones, and silences. They should also be tolerant of what may appear to be repetitious or irrelevant information from the witness. Above all, interviewers must try to curb their eagerness to determine whether the interviewee witnessed anything untoward.

3.182 A form of active listening is needed, letting the witness know that what they have communicated has been received by the interviewer. This can be achieved by reflecting back to the witness what they have just communicated, for example: 'I didn't like it when he did that' (witness); 'You didn't like it' (interviewer). The interviewer should be aware of the danger of subconsciously or consciously indicating approval or disapproval of the information just given.

3.183 If the witness has communicated nothing of relevance regarding the purpose of the interview, the interviewer should consider, in the light of the plans made for the interview, whether to proceed to the next phase of the interview (i.e. questioning). The needs of the witness and of justice must both be considered. Exceptionally, consideration may be given to now concluding the interview by moving directly to the closure phase.

Compliance

3.184 Some vulnerable interviewees may be particularly compliant in that they will try to be helpful by going along with much of what they believe the interviewer 'wants to hear' and/or is suggesting to them. This is particularly so for witnesses who believe the interviewer to be an authority figure. Some witnesses may also be frightened of authority figures. The interviewer should, therefore, try not to appear too authoritative, but should be confident and competent as a means of reassuring the witness that they can be relied on.

3.185 Many vulnerable people are very concerned to present themselves in the best possible light, and many might try to appear as 'normal' as possible by, for example, pretending to understand when they do not. This is something we all do. Even though they may not understand a question, vulnerable witnesses may prefer to answer it than to say that they don't understand. Saying that one doesn't understand a question can be taken to be implying that the interviewer or witness is at fault. Given that some vulnerable witnesses will prefer to avoid these implications, it is appropriate to reassure them by re-emphasising the ground rules set out in paragraph 3.171 at appropriate points during the interview.

3.186 An emerging finding is that interviewees who feel empowered may well have less of a need to demonstrate compliance. This is one reason why allowing the witness some control of the interview is likely to be beneficial.

3.187 Interviewers should clearly explain in the rapport phase that because they were not present at the event(s) they may unwittingly ask questions that witnesses do not understand or questions that they cannot answer. They should explain that if they do ask such questions they would be very happy for witnesses to indicate (perhaps by the use of a red card) that they don't understand, don't remember or don't know the answer. Vulnerable witnesses may benefit from practice at this before the interview commences. Interviewers should also make it clear that if the witness does not know the answer to a question, 'I don't know' responses are welcome. This will also help to avoid witnesses feeling under pressure to confabulate (i.e. to fill in parts of the event that they did not witness or cannot remember), which is otherwise likely to be the case for some vulnerable people.

3.188 If communication becomes difficult it may be helpful, where appropriate, for the interviewer to say 'Can you think of a way to tell me more?' or 'Can you think of a way to show me what you mean?' or 'Is there a way I can make this easier for you?'

3.189 If the witness has communicated something that the interviewer feels needs to be clarified, but the witness at present seems reluctant or unable to do so, it may be better that the interviewer return to the point later in the interview rather than be insistent.

Acquiescence

3.190 Research has consistently found that many vulnerable witnesses acquiesce to 'yes/no' questions. That is, they answer such questions affirmatively with 'Yes' regardless of content. This can occur even when an almost identical 'yes/no' question is asked subsequently but this time with the opposite meaning. This tendency to respond positively to every question occurs particularly frequently with some people with a learning disability. However, it is not solely due to interviewee vulnerability. The way that the interview is conducted (e.g. in an overly authoritative way) and the nature of the questions asked (e.g. suggestive or too complex) will also influence the extent of unconditional positive responding.

3.191 Sometimes 'nay-saying' (repeatedly responding with 'No') will occur, particularly for questions dealing with matters that are socially disapproved of or are social taboos.

3.192 Acquiescence is one of the major reasons why interviewers should do their very best to avoid using 'yes/no' questions, even though they are used frequently in everyday conversations. Questions that have a 'yes/no' format can very often be transformed into questions that have an 'either/or' format. Research has found that 'either/or' questions, by avoiding 'yea-saying' or 'nay-saying', more frequently elicit reliable responses from vulnerable people than do 'yes/no' questions. Even so, a small proportion of people seem always to choose the latter of the two alternatives offered by 'either/or' questions. If an interviewee appears to be doing this, the interviewer should phrase some of the 'either/or' questions so that the first alternative is the one that is more likely to fit in with the account the witness is giving.

3.193 Similarly, if some 'yes/no' questions have to be used, they should be phrased so that sometimes 'Yes' and sometimes 'No' would be the response that fits in better with the account the witness is giving.

Phase three: questioning

Prior to the questioning phase of the interview

3.194 Before asking the witness any questions it may be beneficial to outline for them what is expected of them in this phase of the interview. It is helpful for the interviewer to tell the witness that they will now be asking them some questions, based on what they have already communicated in the free narrative phase, in order to expand and clarify upon what they have said. It is also beneficial to reiterate a number of the ground rules outlined in the rapport phase of the interview (see paragraph 3.171), for example to explain to the witness that detail is required, to explain that this is a difficult task which requires a lot of concentration and to point out that it is acceptable to say 'I don't know' or 'I don't understand' to a question.

General approach

3.195 During the free narrative phase of an interview most witnesses will not be able to recall everything relevant that is in their memory. Many vulnerable people because, for example, they are frightened or stressed, or have a learning disability, will not be that skilled at accessing their own memory as is required by the free narrative phase. Therefore, their accounts could greatly benefit from the asking of appropriate questions that assist further recall. However, both research and best practice have found that vulnerable interviewees may well have great difficulty with questions unless these:

- > are simple;
- > do not contain jargon;
- > do not contain abstract words and/or abstract ideas;
- > contain only one point per question (see Chapter 4, paragraphs 4.168 and 4.169 for more information about multiple questions);
- > are not too directive/suggestive; and
- > do not contain double negatives.

3.196 In addition, interviewers need fully to appreciate that there are various types of question which vary in how directive they are. The questioning phase should, whenever possible, commence with open-ended questions and then proceed, if necessary, to specific-closed questions. Forced-choice questions and leading questions should only be used as a last resort. When questioning a witness, interviewers may wish to ask the various types of question about one issue, before proceeding to ask questions about another. This would be good practice in terms of how memory storage is organised. When this occurs, the questioning on each issue should normally begin with an open-ended question, although some particularly vulnerable witnesses may not be able to cope with such questions and specific-closed questions might be necessary.

3.197 When posing questions, interviewers should try to make use of information that the witness has already provided and words/concepts that the witness is familiar with (e.g. for time, location, persons). Some vulnerable witnesses have difficulty understanding pronouns (e.g. he, she, they); in these circumstances it is better for interviewers to use people's names wherever possible.

3.198 Some vulnerable witnesses will experience difficulty if, without warning, the interviewer switches the questioning to a new topic. To help witnesses, interviewers should indicate a topic change by saying, for example, 'I'd now like to ask you about something else.'

3.199 Many vulnerable witnesses will have difficulty with questions unless they are simple, contain only one point per question, do not contain abstract words or double negatives, and lack suggestion and jargon. Some vulnerable witnesses may well misinterpret terms that the interviewer is familiar with. For example, they may think that someone 'being charged' involves payment or that 'defendant' means a person who defended themselves against an assault.

3.200 It is important that interviewers check that witnesses understand what has just been said to them by asking the witness to convey back to the interviewer (where this is possible) what they understand the interviewer to have just said. Merely asking the witness 'Do you understand?' may result simply in an automatic positive response. If they do not understand a question some vulnerable people will nevertheless attempt to answer it to the best of their ability by guessing at what is meant, possibly producing an inappropriate reply.

3.201 Some vulnerable witnesses will respond to a question from, or a comment made by, an interviewer by repeating the last few words in the utterance (echolalia). Appropriate methods for managing this depend on the individual. Interviewers should take appropriate advice (e.g. from a carer) on how to manage it while planning the interview.

3.202 If, for the sake of clarity, interviewers decide to repeat one or more questions later on in the interview, even with changed wording, they should explain that it does not indicate that they were unhappy with the witness's initial responses but that they just want to check their understanding of what the witness said (for example, 'I just want to make sure that I've understood what you said about the man's jacket. What colour did you say it was?'). Otherwise, some vulnerable witnesses may believe that the questions are being repeated solely because their earlier responses were incorrect or inappropriate or that they were not believed.

3.203 Some vulnerable witnesses may also have a limited understanding of the relationship between negative events, their causation, and who is responsible.

3.204 Even if an event was an unforeseeable accident or 'an act of God', some vulnerable people will believe that someone must be held responsible. Some may even take the blame, thinking that the interviewer (an authority figure) will like them more if they do.

3.205 The questioning of vulnerable witnesses requires extensive skill and understanding on the part of interviewers. Incompetent interviewers can cause vulnerable witnesses to provide unreliable accounts. However, interviewers who are able to put into practice the guidance on questioning contained in this document will provide witnesses with much better opportunities to present their own accounts of what really happened.

Open-ended questions

3.206 Open-ended questions are ones that are worded in such a way as to enable the witness to provide an unrestricted response. These also allow the witness to control the flow of information. This type of questioning minimises the risk that interviewers will impose their view of what happened. Such questions usually specify a general topic which allows the witness considerable freedom in determining what to reply. Research and practice show that the most reliable and detailed answers from interviewees of all ages are secured from open-ended questions. It is important, therefore, that the questioning phase should begin with open-ended questions and that this type of question should be widely employed throughout the interview.

3.207 Questions beginning with the phrase 'Tell me' or the words 'Describe' or 'Explain' are useful examples of this type of question. 'You said you were... Tell me everything that you remember' is an example of an open-ended question.

3.208 Open-ended questions can also be used to invite the witness to elaborate upon incomplete information provided in the preceding free narrative phase. For example, 'You've already told me that the person who hit you was a man. Describe him for me.' For a witness who has communicated very little in the free narrative phase, a helpful question could be of the form 'Are there some things you are not very happy about?'

3.209 If the witness responds to open-ended questions, the interviewer should try to avoid interrupting even if the witness is not providing the expected type(s) of information. Interrupting the witness disempowers them and suggests that only short answers are required. If a witness is communicating information that the interviewer does not understand, this should be returned to only when the witness has finished responding to that question.

3.210 When being questioned some witnesses may become distressed. If this occurs, the interviewer should consider moving away from the topic for a while and, if necessary, reverting to an earlier phase of the interview (e.g. the rapport phase). Shifting away from and then back to a topic the witness finds distressing and/or difficult may need to occur several times within an interview.

3.211 Some vulnerable witnesses may not have the usual understanding of time. Wherever possible, the planning phase should have focused on the witness's likely grasp of time, for example in terms of times of day, days of the week, the length of a week or a month or a year. Interviewers can assist witnesses by using words/phrases for time that they understand. If a relevant event may have occurred repeatedly, some witnesses might find it easier to describe the general pattern of these events before recalling in detail specific episodes. Their account of the general pattern may well facilitate recall of specific episodes. Therefore, interviewers should not prematurely ask questions about specific episodes. Most witnesses, whether vulnerable or not, will recall correct information about events that is not in the same time order as things actually happened. Some vulnerable people may not have needed to rely in their everyday lives on a good sense of time and thus questions about time will need to be put to them in ways they can understand, for instance by reference to fixed points in their own lives such as meal breaks or public festivals or holidays.

Specific-closed questions

3.212 A closed question is a question that closes down an interviewee's response and thus allows only a relatively narrow range of responses to be obtained, where the response usually consists of one word or a short phrase. Closed questions can, therefore, be appropriate or inappropriate in nature, depending on the quality of the information likely to be obtained from the interviewee. Specific-closed questions are appropriate and serve to ask in a non-suggestive way for extension or clarification of information previously supplied by the witness. Specific-closed questions vary in their degree of explicitness and it is always best to begin with the least explicit version of the question. Thus, a vulnerable adult witness in a sexual assault investigation may have responded to an open-ended prompt by mentioning that a named man had climbed into his bed. A specific-closed, but non-leading, follow-up question might be 'What clothes was he wearing at the time?' If this yielded no clear answer, a further, more explicit question might be 'Was he wearing any clothes?'

3.213 Specific-closed questions can ask in a non-suggestive way for extension and/or clarification of information previously provided by the witness. For example, for a witness who has already provided information that a young man in the high street was wearing a jacket, a specific yet non-suggestive question could be 'What colour was the man's jacket?'

3.214 Examples of specific-closed questions are those that begin 'Who', 'What', 'Where', 'When', and 'Why'. Questions involving the word 'why' (or similar utterances, e.g. 'So how come...?') may be interpreted by vulnerable people as attributing blame to them and should therefore be avoided wherever possible. Also to be avoided is repeating a question soon after the witness has provided an answer to it (including 'Don't know'). Witnesses may well interpret this as a criticism of their original response and accordingly they may provide a different response closer to what they believe the interviewer wants them to give.

3.215 Although some particularly vulnerable witnesses may not be able to provide information in a free narrative phase nor be able to respond to open-ended questions, they may be able to respond to more specific questions. However, interviewers must be aware that specific-closed questions should not unduly suggest answers to the witness. An example of a specific-closed, yet non-leading, question for an institutionalised witness who has, as yet, provided no relevant information could be 'What happens at bath time?'

3.216 For some vulnerable witnesses, open-ended questions will not assist them that much to access their memory, whereas specific-closed questions may well do so. One problem here is that the more narrow and focused specific-closed questions become, the easier it is for them to be suggestive.

Forced-choice questions

(See also discussion at paragraphs 3.184 to 3.193 with regard to acquiescence and compliance.)

3.217 Forced-choice questions are ones that provide the interviewee with a limited number of alternative responses. For example, 'Was the man's jacket black, another colour, or can't you remember?' As long as the question provides a number of sensible and equally likely alternatives it would not be deemed suggestive. Some vulnerable witnesses may find such closed questions particularly helpful. However, at the beginning of the use of forced-choice questions interviewers should try to avoid using ones that contain only two alternatives (especially yes/no questions) unless these two alternatives contain all possibilities (e.g. 'Was it daytime or night-time?'). If questions containing only two alternatives are used, these should be phrased so that they sometimes result in the first alternative being chosen and sometimes in the second alternative.

3.218 Some vulnerable witnesses may only be able to respond to forced-choice questions that contain two alternatives. Even in such circumstances it should still be possible for interviewers to avoid an investigative interview being made up largely of such questions. However, such interviews are likely to require special expertise and extensive planning, especially regarding the questions to be asked.

3.219 If forced-choice questions are to be used, it is particularly important to remind the witness that 'Don't know' or 'Don't understand' or 'Don't remember' responses are welcome and that the interviewer does not know what happened. If a witness replies 'I don't know' to an 'either/or' question (e.g. 'Was the car large or small?'), interviewers should try to avoid then offering a compromise 'yes/no' question (e.g. 'If it wasn't large or small, would you say it was medium size?') that the witness may merely acquiesce to.

Leading questions

3.220 Put simply, a leading question is one that implies the answer or assumes facts that are likely to be in dispute. Of course, whether a question is leading depends not only on the nature of the question (where the answer is implicit in the way the question is worded) but also on what the witness has already communicated in the interview. An example of a question that is leading by virtue of the very nature of the words used would include 'I bet that hurt, didn't it?' An example of a leading question that depends on what the witness has already communicated in the interview would include 'Where did he punch you?' when the witness said previously in the interview that a male assailant 'hit' them, without using the word 'punch'.

3.221 When a leading question is improperly put to a witness giving evidence at court, opposing counsel can make an objection to it before the witness replies. This is not usually possible during video- or audio-recorded interviews, but subsequent objections could be made which may result in parts of the recording being edited out.

3.222 In addition to the legal objections, psychological research indicates strongly that interviewees' responses to leading questions tend to be determined more by the manner of questioning than by valid remembering. Some vulnerable witnesses may be more willing to respond to 'yes/no' questions with a 'yes' response. Therefore, if questions permitting only a 'yes' or 'no' response are asked, these should be phrased so that those on the same issue sometimes result in a 'yes' response and sometimes a 'no' response.

3.223 It cannot be overemphasised that responses to leading questions referring to central facts of the case that have not already been described by the witness in an earlier phase of the interview are likely to be of very limited evidential value in criminal proceedings. If a leading question produces an evidentially relevant response, particularly one that contains relevant information not led by the question, interviewers should take care not to follow this up with further questions that might have the effect of leading the witness. Instead, they should revert to the 'neutral' modes of questioning described above.

3.224 There are circumstances in criminal proceedings where leading questions are permissible. For example, a witness is often led into their testimony by being asked to confirm their name or some other introductory matter, because these matters are unlikely to be in dispute. More central issues may also be the subject of leading questions if there is no dispute about them. However, at the interview stage it may not be known which facts will be in dispute.

3.225 Courts also accept that it may be impractical to ban leading questions. This may be because the witness does not understand what they are expected to tell the court without some prompting, as may be the case for a witness with a learning disability.

3.226 As the courts become more aware of the difficulties of obtaining evidence from vulnerable witnesses, and of counteracting the pressures on witnesses to keep silent, a sympathetic attitude may be taken towards leading questions deemed necessary. A leading question that succeeds in prompting a witness into spontaneously providing information beyond that led by the question will normally be acceptable. However, unless there is absolutely no alternative, the interviewer should never be the first to suggest to the witness that a particular offence was committed, or that a particular person was responsible. Once such a step has been taken, it will be extremely difficult to counter the argument that the interviewer 'put the idea into the witness's head' and that their account is, therefore, tainted.

3.227 However inappropriately leading or suggestive some questions might be, some vulnerable witnesses will go along with them and may produce nonsensical replies. Such incompetence by the interviewer will inappropriately call into question the competency of the witness.

Understanding what the witness is trying to convey

3.228 Some vulnerable witnesses will have speech or other means of communication that other people find difficult to understand. At appropriate points in the interview, and especially in the closure phase (see paragraphs 3.237 to 3.243), the interviewer should provide the witness with a recap of what the interviewer believes the witness to have communicated. When the meaning of a witness's communication is unclear, they could be asked, for example, to 'Put it another way', or 'Can you think of another way of telling me?'

3.229 Interviewers need to be aware that the common human frailty of ignoring information contrary to one's own view may be even more likely to affect their interviews with vulnerable people whom they are having difficulty understanding and/or may believe to be less competent than other people. Research on interviewing has consistently found that interviewers ignore information that fails to fit in with their assumptions about what may have happened. One important role for the interview monitor is to check that the lead interviewer does not ignore important information provided by the witness.

Topic selection

3.230 Within the questioning phase of the interview the interviewer should subdivide the vulnerable witness's account into manageable topics or episodes and seek elaboration on each area using open-ended and then specific-closed questions as outlined in paragraphs 3.207 to 3.217. Each topic/episode should be systematically dealt with until the witness is unable to provide any more information. Interviewers should try to avoid topic-hopping (i.e. rapidly moving from one topic to another and back again) as this is not helpful for the witness's remembering processes and may confuse them.

3.231 Good questioning should also avoid the asking of a series of predetermined questions. Instead, the sequence of questions should be adjusted according to the witness's own retrieval processes. This is what 'witness-compatible questioning' means. Each individual will store information concerning the event in memory in a unique way. Thus, for maximum retrieval/information gain, the order of the questioning should resemble the structure of the witness's knowledge of the event and should not be based on the interviewer's notion or a set protocol. It is the interviewer's task to deduce how the relevant information is stored by the witness (via the free narrative account) and to organise the order of questions accordingly.

Misleading statements

3.232 Vulnerable witnesses can on occasion provide misleading accounts of events; these are often the result of misunderstandings or misremembering rather than deliberate fabrication. The most common cause of these misunderstandings is the interviewer failing to ask appropriate types of question or reaching a premature conclusion that the interviewer then presses the witness to confirm.

3.233 Vulnerable witnesses, like any other witness, can on occasion be misleading in their statements, either by fabricating allegations or by omitting evidentially important information from their answers. Where inconsistencies in the witness's account give rise to suspicion, interviewers should explore these inconsistencies with the witness after they have completed their basic account. Witnesses should only be challenged directly over an inconsistency in exceptional circumstances and even then only when it is essential to do so. Rather, such inconsistencies should be presented in the context of puzzlement by the interviewer and the need to be quite clear what the witness has said. On no account should the interviewer voice their suspicions to the witness or label a witness as a liar: there may be a perfectly innocuous explanation for any inconsistency.

3.234 In evaluating the witness's account, interviewers should not rely upon cues from the witness's behaviour as guides to the reliability or otherwise of the witness's statements.

3.235 Where a witness with a learning disability uses language or knowledge, particularly of sexual matters, that appears to be inappropriate for them, specific questions can be asked to try to locate the source of that knowledge. Similarly, if it is suspected that a witness alleging sexual abuse may have been exposed to sexually explicit films, videos, internet sites or magazines, specific questions should be used to explore whether parts of the witness's account could conceivably be derived from such sources. It is important that all such questions should be reserved for the end of the formal questioning so as not to disrupt the witness's narrative.

Phase four: closing the interview

3.236 In this final main phase, interviewers should provide an account of what the witness has said during the interview. This should be done as much as possible in the witness's own words. This allows the witness to check the interviewer's recall of what they have said for accuracy. Care should be taken not to convey any impression of disbelief. The interviewer must explicitly tell the witness to correct them if they have missed anything out or have got something wrong.

Closure

3.237 The interviewer should always try to ensure that the interview ends appropriately. Although it may not always be necessary to pass through each of the above phases before going on to the next, there should be good reason for not doing so. Every interview must have a closure phase. In this phase it may be a useful idea to discuss again some of the 'neutral' topics mentioned in the rapport phase.

3.238 In this phase, regardless of the outcome of the interview, every effort should be made to ensure that the witness is not distressed but is in a positive frame of mind. Even if the witness has provided little or no information, they should not be made to feel that they have failed or disappointed the interviewer. However, praise or congratulations for providing information should not be given.

3.239 The witness should be thanked for their time and effort and asked if there is anything more they wish to communicate (e.g. by saying to the witness 'Is there anything else you want to say?' or 'Is there anything you think you've missed out?' or 'Is there anything else you think I should know?').

3.240 An explanation should be given to the witness of what, if anything, might happen next, but promises that cannot be kept should not be made about future developments.

3.241 The witness should always be asked if they have any questions and these should be answered as appropriately as possible. It is good practice to give the witness (or, if more appropriate, an accompanying person) a contact name and telephone number in case the witness later decides that they have further matters they wish to discuss with the interviewer.

3.242 Not only in closing the interview, but also throughout its duration, the interviewer must be prepared to assist the witness to cope with the effects upon themselves of giving an account of what may well have been greatly distressing events (and about which the witness may feel some guilt).

3.243 The aim of closure should be that, as far as possible, the witness should leave the interview in a positive frame of mind. In addition to the formal elements, it will be useful to revert to neutral topics discussed in the rapport phase to assist this. It is normal to complete a video-recorded interview by stating the end time.

Evaluation

3.244 Evaluation should take two primary forms:
(i) evaluation of the information obtained and
(ii) evaluation of the interviewer's performance.

Evaluation of the information obtained

3.245 After the interview has concluded, the interview team will need to make an objective assessment as to the information obtained and evaluate this in light of the whole case. Are there any further actions and/or enquires required? What direction should the case take?

Evaluation of interviewer performance

3.246 The interviewer's skills should be evaluated. This can take the form of self-evaluation, with the interviewer examining the interview for areas of good performance and poor performance. This should result in a development plan. The interview could also be assessed by a supervisor and/or someone who is qualified to examine the interview and give good constructive feedback to the interviewer, highlighting areas for improvement. This should form part of a staff appraisal system (see tier 4 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)).

Post-interview documentation and storage of recordings

3.247 The interviewer should complete the relevant paperwork as soon as possible after the interview is completed, including the Record of Video Interview (ROVI) referred to in Appendix K. A statement dealing with the preparation and conduct of the interview should be made while the events are still fresh in the interviewer's mind. Responsibility for transcription and the stage at which a transcription should take place are set out in Appendix L.

3.248 Recordings should be stored as recommended in Appendix J.

Further interviews

3.249 One of the key aims of video-recording early investigative interviews is to reduce the number of times a witness is asked to tell their account. However, it may be the case that even with an experienced and skilful interviewer, the witness may provide less information than they are capable of divulging. A supplementary interview may therefore be necessary and this, too, should be video-recorded, if possible. Consideration should always be given to whether holding such an interview would be in the witness's interest. The reasons for conducting supplementary interviews should be clearly articulated and recorded in writing. The CPS should be consulted if necessary.

3.250 With particularly vulnerable witnesses, a decision could be made at the planning stage to divide the interview into a number of sections to be conducted by the same interviewer on different days, or at different times on the same day, with rapport and closure being achieved each time.

Identification procedures

3.251 Where a video-recorded interview has been conducted by virtue of this chapter, the production of facial composites using E-FIT or other systems or the production of an artist's impression should also be video-recorded. This will enable the court to hear the evidence from the witness in the same medium as the main evidence-in-chief and show how any new evidence has come about, giving confidence to the evidence-gathering process and reducing the need for the witness to give additional evidence-in-chief in the witness box or by live link. Staff carrying out these procedures should be suitably trained to interview and record the evidence in line with this document (see Appendix E for more detailed advice on identification parades with witnesses interviewed in accordance with this guidance).

Therapeutic help for vulnerable adult witnesses

3.252 While vulnerable adult witnesses may be judged by the investigating team, and/or by those professionals responsible for their welfare, to require therapeutic help prior to giving evidence in criminal proceedings, it is important to recognise the individual's right to exercise choice. It is vital that professionals undertaking therapy with prospective vulnerable adult witnesses prior to a criminal trial adhere to the official guidance: Provision of Therapy for Vulnerable or Intimidated Adult Witnesses Prior to a Criminal Trial: Practical Guidance (CPS and the Department of Health with the Home Office, 2001).

The cognitive interview (CI)

3.253 This interviewing procedure was developed by cognitive psychologists and it contains, as well as procedures based on good communication skills (many of which have been described above), a number of procedures specifically designed to assist witnesses to access their memories. These procedures are usually referred to as:

- > mental reinstatement of context;
- > report everything;
- > change the temporal order of recall; and
- > change perspective.

3.254 A number of professionals who have worked with vulnerable adult witnesses recommend use of the CI. However, research has found that unless the training of interviewers who attempt to use the CI has been appropriate they will fail to use this technique effectively and could confuse the witness. Some witnesses may not be able to benefit from all of the CI procedures (e.g. witnesses with autism may well not be able to 'change perspective').

3.255 Interviewers and their managers need to be aware that techniques that assist witnesses to produce more recall will result in interviews that last longer. Surveys of those who use the CI have found that they often report it to be effective. However, their workloads and their supervisors put them under pressure not to conduct interviews that are time-consuming. Such pressures should be resisted for interviews with vulnerable witnesses.

3.256 Further information about the procedures contained in the CI can be found in Part 4B of this document.

Special interviewing techniques

3.257 At present, not a lot is known about techniques other than those described in this document that may further assist vulnerable witnesses. Witnesses who find verbal communication difficult may sometimes benefit from acting out or drawing the information that they wish to convey. However, in such instances it is very important that the interviewer checks in an appropriate way with the witness that the interviewer has correctly understood what the witness was trying to convey.

3.258 The use of items similar to those involved in the to-be-remembered event may assist recollection. However, they may also cause the witness distress. Furthermore, it may not be certain which items were actually involved and the introduction of incorrect items may mislead and/or confuse the witness. Similarly, models or toy items may be misleading if the objects they represent were not, in fact, part of the event. Some vulnerable witnesses may not realise the link between a toy or model and the real-life object it is supposed to represent.

3.259 Whichever special techniques are being considered for use in an interview, the emphasis must be on assisting witnesses to retrieve information from their own memories rather than on suggesting things to them. Research has found that the CI procedure does seem to assist people with mild learning disabilities to recall more correct information. However, this procedure should only be conducted by those who have been appropriately trained in its use, including what to do if the person's recall is so vivid and powerful as to cause them (and possibly others present) distress.

Other interview techniques

3.260 Other techniques to assist witnesses to give accounts are being developed. These could be used in interviews carried out for the purposes of this guidance provided that evidential considerations are borne in mind, interviewers have been specifically trained to use them, and agreement is given by senior managers or an interview adviser (tier 5 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)) after discussion of the issues involved.

3.261 A process of supportive reconstruction may be very helpful in assisting some witnesses with mental disorder to recall situations and memories. This involves working through repeatedly the context of the memory, reflecting back what has been established so far, and cueing witnesses to relate what happened next (the phenomenological approach, i.e. events perceptible to the senses and relating to remarked phenomena or events). If this technique is employed, it is essential that the interviewer follow and not lead the witness.

3.262 When free narrative and questioning have produced little information of relevance but suspicion remains high, a facilitative style of questioning could be used with witnesses who are particularly reticent. This can involve asking about nice/nasty things, good/bad people, what the witness would like to change in their life, or similar techniques. For those who have been put under pressure not to disclose certain matters, an open-ended discussion of secrets may be introduced. Such methods may be very successful for those trained in these styles of questioning. If the interviewer avoids any suggestive questioning and succeeds in encouraging the witness to give an account, there should be no reason why evidence gained in this way should not be considered by the courts.

Witnesses who become suspects during the interview

3.263 It may happen that a witness who is being interviewed comes under suspicion of involvement in a criminal offence, perhaps by uttering a self-incriminating statement. Any decision on an appropriate course of action in these circumstances should involve taking into account the seriousness of the crime admitted and weighing it against the seriousness of the crime under investigation.

3.264 Where the priority is to obtain evidence from the person as a witness, the interview can proceed.

3.265 If it is concluded that the evidence of the witness as suspect is highly relevant to a particular case, the interview should be terminated and the witness told that it is possible that they may be interviewed concerning these matters at a later time. Care should be taken not to close the interview abruptly in these circumstances. Instead, the witness should be allowed to complete any statement that they wish to make.

3.266 Any admission by a witness in the course of an investigative interview may not be admissible as evidence in criminal proceedings against them. Normally, a further interview would need to be carried out in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Code for the Detention, Treatment and Questioning of Persons by Police Officers (Code C of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984). The Code provides, among other matters, for the cautioning of a suspect.

3.267 A witness who confesses to a criminal offence during the course of an interview may ask the interviewer for some guarantee of immunity. On no account should any such guarantee be given, however remote the prospect of criminal proceedings against the witness might seem. If the witness is to be interviewed in accordance with Code C of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, they must be cautioned and the purpose of the interview made clear.

4 Planning and conducting interviews with intimidated witnesses, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses, including 'reluctant' and 'hostile' witnesses

Part 4A: Planning and preparing for interviews

Aims

By the end of Part 4A, those involved in planning and preparing for interviews with intimidated, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act (CJA) 2003 and significant witnesses, including reluctant and hostile witnesses, should be able to:

- > identify:
 - intimidated witnesses (paragraphs 4.1 and 4.2);
 - Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses (paragraphs 4.3 to 4.6);
 - significant or key witnesses (paragraphs 4.7 to 4.10);
 - reluctant witnesses (paragraphs 4.11 to 4.14); and
 - hostile witnesses (paragraph 4.15);
- > describe the initial action to be taken in respect of the witnesses referred to in this chapter (paragraphs 4.16 and 4.17);
- > explain how the witnesses referred to in this chapter could be supported and safeguarded at interview (paragraphs 4.18 to 4.23);
- > consider the issue of consent (paragraphs 4.24 to 4.26);
- > identify the information required to plan interviews with the witnesses referred to in this chapter (paragraphs 4.27 to 4.48);

- > use the planning information to plan interviews with the witnesses referred to in this chapter (paragraphs 4.49 to 4.76); and
- > prepare the witnesses referred to in this chapter for an interview (paragraphs 4.90 to 4.96).

What follows is a recommended procedure for planning and preparing for interviews with the witnesses referred to in this chapter. Part 4B covers the interview itself and treats the interview as a process in which a variety of interviewing techniques are deployed in the framework of a phased approach. While what follows in this chapter and Part 4B should not be regarded as a checklist to be rigidly worked through, the sound legal framework that it provides should not be departed from by interviewers unless they have discussed and agreed the reasons for doing so with their senior manager or an interview adviser (tier 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers' (ACPO's) Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)). Any such agreements and the rationale underpinning them should be recorded. It may subsequently be necessary to explain such departures in court.

Who are intimidated witnesses?

4.1 Intimidated witnesses are those likely to experience fear or distress about testifying to such an extent that special measures are necessary to maximise the quality of their evidence. Cases that are likely to give rise to intimidated witnesses include:

- > sexual offences;
- > domestic violence;
- > murder and other serious assaults;
- > road deaths;
- > racially motivated crime;
- > homophobic crime;
- > crime motivated by the perceived religious or political views of the victim;
- > offences where the alleged perpetrator has a relationship of care to or authority over the witness;
- > offences where the witness is related to the alleged perpetrator;
- > offences where the witness lives in close proximity to the alleged perpetrator or their family or associates;
- > offences where the witness is elderly and/or frail;
- > offences that form part of a series of incidents in which there is evidence of repeat victimisation;
- > offences where the alleged perpetrator is influential in the criminal fraternity (this should not be based solely on anecdotal evidence);
- > offences where the violent nature of the alleged perpetrator or their family or associates suggests an increased likelihood of intimidation;
- > offences where the alleged perpetrator or their family or associates have the intention and the ability to influence or interfere with the witness; and
- > offences where witnesses have been or are likely to be subject to intimidation as a result of the behaviour of the alleged perpetrator or their family or associates or anyone else who is likely to be a defendant or a witness in the proceedings.

Sexual offences include those alleged by adults in relation to events said to have taken place in their childhood. This is not intended to be an exhaustive list; each case should be judged on its merits.

4.2 While being the victim of an offence is in itself likely to increase the witness's fear and distress, it is unlikely to be sufficient on its own to categorise a witness as 'intimidated'. However, that a witness is also the victim of the alleged offence should be taken into account along with the other circumstances of the case (such as those listed above).

Who are Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses?

4.3 Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses are those who have or claim to have witnessed, visually or otherwise, an indictable or prescribed triable either-way offence, part of such an offence, or events closely connected with it (including any incriminating comments made by the suspected perpetrator either before or after the offence). Video-recordings of interviews with these witnesses can only be admitted as evidence-in-chief if their recollection of the events is likely to be significantly better at the time of the interview than at the time of giving evidence. Courts will take account of the length of the interval between the alleged event and the interview when considering this question.

4.4 Indictable offences are offences that are so serious that they can only be tried in a Crown Court. They include offences like murder, manslaughter, grievous bodily harm with intent, rape, kidnap and causing death by dangerous driving. Prescribed triable either-way offences are offences that can be tried either in a Crown or a magistrates' court and that have been specifically designated by the Home Secretary as coming within the scope of Section 137 CJA 2003 (no such offences were designated at the time that this document was revised).

4.5 Other than video-recorded interviews as their evidence-in-chief, Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses will not qualify for the Special Measures (screens, live TV link, etc.) set out in the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 unless they also fall into the category of 'vulnerable' as defined in Chapters 2 and 3 of this document or 'intimidated' as defined in this chapter.

4.6 In circumstances where multiple witnesses are involved, it might be necessary to limit the number of interviewees who are visually recorded according to the resources that are available. Such a decision should be made by the senior police officer in charge of the investigation, and a record should be made of the rationale underpinning it, including the criteria used for determining which interviewees were and, by implication, which interviewees were not visually recorded (this might include factors such as proximity to the event, line of sight, etc.).

Who are significant witnesses?

4.7 Significant witnesses, sometimes referred to as 'key' witnesses, are those who:

- > have or claim to have witnessed, visually or otherwise, an indictable offence, part of such an offence or events closely connected with it (including any incriminating comments made by the suspected offender either before or after the offence), but who are unlikely to have video-recordings of their interviews admitted as evidence-in-chief under Section 137 CJA 2003 as a result of there having been a lengthy interval between the alleged event and the interview; or
- > stand in a particular relationship to the victim or have a central position in an investigation into an indictable offence.

In these circumstances, the purpose of the recording is primarily one of demonstrating the integrity of the interview process. There is no statutory provision for video-recordings of interviews with significant witnesses to be played as evidence-in-chief.

4.8 There are two ways in which the testimony on a video-recorded interview with a significant witness may be adduced as evidence:

Option 1: Brief written statement from the witness followed by the production of a transcript of the video-recording as an exhibit

- a) The witness should be invited to make a brief Section 9 Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement as soon after the interview as possible, while what was said is fresh in their memory, confirming that what they said during the interview is an accurate account of their evidence. This statement should not include the detail of what was said during the interview because it will subsequently be reflected in the transcript.
- b) A transcript should be compiled by the police. The interviewer should check the transcript for accuracy against the recording and produce it as an exhibit in a Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement.
- c) The witness's and the interviewer's Criminal Justice Act 1967 statements, together with the transcript, should be adduced as evidence. The existence of the recording(s) should be revealed to the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) as 'unused material' under the terms of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996.

Option 2: Full written statement of the witness's evidence derived from the video-recording

- a) A full Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement should be prepared from the video-recording as soon as possible, while what was said is still fresh in the witness's memory. It is good practice to review the recording prior to preparing the statement. There is no need to have the witness present during this process.
- b) The witness should be asked to review the Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement and invited to make any alterations or additions to it that they consider necessary. Having agreed its content, the witness should be invited to sign the statement.
- c) The witness's Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement should be adduced as evidence. The existence of the recordings should be revealed to the CPS as unused material.

Option 1 represents the preferred method, although it is accepted that it will be necessary to adopt option 2 where the resources needed to transcribe a recording are limited.

4.9 Adults making allegations of abuse said to have taken place in their childhood should be treated as significant witnesses in circumstances where they do not meet the necessary qualifying criteria to be considered intimidated witnesses (i.e. experiencing fear or distress about testifying to such an extent that Special Measures are necessary to maximise the quality of their evidence).

4.10 As with Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses, in circumstances where multiple witnesses are involved, it might be necessary to limit the number of interviewees who are visually recorded according to the resources that are available. Such a decision should be made by the senior police officer in charge of the investigation and a record should be made of the rationale underpinning it, including the criteria used for determining which interviewees were visually recorded.

Who are reluctant witnesses?

4.11 Reluctant witnesses are people believed to have witnessed an offence, part of an offence or events closely connected with it, but who are reluctant to become involved in the investigative process. At times within an investigation, interviewees will encounter reluctant intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 or significant witnesses. There could be a number of different reasons for this. For example: adverse perceptions of the police or criminal justice process based on experience or popular perception; fear of an alleged perpetrator; concern about the response of the community where they live; worries about their identity being released; or uncertainty about how they fit into the overall process. The initial actions of the interviewer should, therefore, include trying to establish the reasons for the witness's reluctance, since it is only by doing so that an attempt to address the issue can be made.

4.12 In order to try to address the issues underpinning the witness's reluctance, it is essential that interviewees have a good knowledge of the criminal justice process and the Special Measures that intimidated witnesses are eligible for. Interviewees should also be conversant with local protocols in relation to witness protection programmes and in respect of witness support organisations.

4.13 Interviewees should endeavour to build a rapport with reluctant witnesses and take reasonable steps to address their concerns prior to the interview. In some instances, it might be necessary to build rapport over several sessions. Reluctant witnesses should be given an outline of the offence(s) being investigated and informed that it is suspected that they might have witnessed it, part of it or events closely connected with it (as appropriate). Specific details of the allegation and the particulars of what is alleged to have been witnessed should not be discussed during these sessions, although the guidance set out in paragraphs 4.16 and 4.17 should be adhered to. No pressure should be brought to bear on these witnesses to talk to police or to give evidence; the function of the investigator in these circumstances is simply one of providing enough information to allow the potential witness to make an informed choice. Records should be kept of these sessions either in the form of notes or by way of a visual or audio-recording, as appropriate in the circumstances.

4.14 Interviewers should seek advice from a supervisor, the senior officer in charge of the investigation or an interview adviser (tier 5 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)) wherever necessary.

Who are hostile witnesses?

4.15 Hostile witnesses are people believed to have witnessed an offence, part of an offence, or events closely connected with it, but who are opposed to the investigative process. During some investigations, interviewers will encounter hostile intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 or significant witnesses. The reasons for such hostility might include their lifestyle or the fact that they have a close relationship to the alleged perpetrator and intend later to appear before the court as a defence witness. Some of these witnesses might simply refuse to co-operate with police, while others might choose to provide false information intended to support the alleged perpetrator's account. Records must be kept of all interactions with hostile witnesses, regardless of the reason for their hostility and the extent of their co-operation. Where a hostile witness consents to an interview, it should be recorded in accordance with the guidance set out in this document; on video unless they object to it.

Initial contact with intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses

4.16 The need to consider a visually recorded interview will not always be immediately apparent, either to the first police officer who has contact with the witness or to other professionals involved prior to the police being informed. Even where it is apparent, the need to take immediate action in terms of securing medical attention and making initial decisions about the criminal investigation plan might be such that some initial questioning is necessary. Any initial questioning should be intended to elicit a brief account of what is alleged to have taken place; a more detailed account should not be pursued at this stage but should be left until the formal interview takes place as described in Part 4B. Such a brief account should include where and when the event is alleged to have taken place and who was involved or otherwise present. This is because this information is likely to influence decisions made in respect of the following aspects of the criminal investigation plan:

- > forensic and medical examination of the victim;
- > scene of crime examination;
- > interviewing of other witnesses;
- > arrest of alleged offender(s); and
- > witness support.

4.17 In these circumstances, any early discussions with the witness should, as far as possible, adhere to the following basic principles:

- a) Listen to the witness.
- b) Do not stop a witness who is freely recalling significant events.
- c) Where it is necessary to ask questions, they should, as far as possible in the circumstances, be open-ended or specific-closed rather than forced-choice, leading or multiple (see paragraphs 4.153 to 4.174).
- d) Ask no more questions than are necessary in the circumstances to take immediate action.
- e) Make a comprehensive note of the discussion, taking care to record the timing, setting and people present as well as what was said by the witness and anybody else present (particularly the actual questions asked of the witness).
- f) Make a note of the demeanour of the witness and anything else that might be relevant to any subsequent formal interview or the wider investigation.
- g) Fully record any comments made by the witness or events that might be relevant to the legal process up to the time of the interview.

Support for intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses prior to the interview

4.18 Intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses need to feel safe and may require support and encouragement to participate in an interview. Such witnesses should be appraised at an early stage about the possibility of having a supporter present during the interview where this is appropriate (see paragraphs 4.72 to 4.76) and about the pre-trial support that can be made available to them (see Chapter 5).

4.19 Intimidated witnesses should also be informed about the protection that might be available to them, including witness protection schemes where appropriate.

4.20 Where there is risk of intimidation, witnesses should be offered information about where rapid help and support can be obtained. A leaflet listing names, addresses and telephone numbers of relevant individuals and agencies should be available in each locality for distribution to witnesses.

4.21 The Special Measures that intimidated witnesses might be given access to at the trial should be outlined and their views ascertained in respect of them. Their views about the possibility of having a supporter present while they are giving evidence should also be solicited. While interviewers are soliciting these views, it is essential that the witness understands that while their views will be listened to, access to Special Measures and/or a supporter during the trial is very much a decision for the court based on an application by the prosecution, and as such should not be taken for granted. Further details of Special Measures are set out in Chapter 6.

4.22 Investigators need to be alert to the possibility that a witness may not be intimidated at the time the offence is reported, but that subsequent events may give rise to fear and distress later on in the criminal process that would qualify the witness for consideration for Special Measures.

4.23 Intimidated, Section 137 CJA 2003 and significant witnesses should be prepared for an interview as appropriate (see paragraphs 4.90 to 4.96).

Consent

4.24 It is a general principle that all witnesses should freely consent to be interviewed and to have the interview recorded on video. For this reason, interviewers should explain the purpose of a video-recorded interview to the witness. Such an explanation should include:

- > the benefits/disadvantages of having or not having the interview video-recorded; and
- > who may see the video-recorded interview (including the alleged offender).

4.25 While interviewers should make a record of the action taken to obtain consent for a video-recorded interview, it is not necessary for the witness to give their consent in writing.

4.26 The witness should be told that, should the case proceed, whether a video-recording is made or not, they may be required to attend court to answer further questions (i.e. cross-examination). Where an application is granted by the court, cross-examination may take place using a live link facility.

Planning and preparing for the interview

4.27 The purpose of an investigative interview is to ascertain the witness's account of the alleged event(s) and any other information that would assist the investigation. A well-conducted interview will only occur if appropriate planning has taken place. The importance of planning cannot, therefore, be overstated; the success of an interview and thus an investigation could hinge on it. Even if the circumstances of the case are such that it is essential that an early interview takes place, a planning session that takes account of all the information available about the witness at the time and identifies the key issues and objectives is required. Attention should be paid at all times to issues of age, gender, race, culture, religion and language.

4.28 In some cases, it might be advisable for there to be a discussion with the CPS in accordance with the guidance set out in Early Special Measures Meetings between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service and Meetings between the Crown Prosecution Service and Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses (CPS, ACPO and the Home Office, 2001). Where such a discussion takes place, there should be a decision about the form in which the statement is to be taken (visually recorded or written). Such decisions must take account of the witness's own expressed preferences as to the form of their statement.

Planning information

4.29 The planning stage of an interview involves some consideration of three types of information:

- > information about the witness (see paragraphs 4.31 to 4.36);
- > information about the alleged offence(s) (see paragraphs 4.37 and 4.38); and
- > investigatively important information (see paragraphs 4.39 to 4.48).

4.30 At this stage, interviewers need to have differing amounts of knowledge about each kind of information. In a general sense, they need to know as much as is possible in the circumstances about the witness, and a little about the alleged offence and investigatively important information.

Information about the witness

4.31 While circumstances will sometimes limit what can be found out about the witness prior to the interview taking place (for example, as a result of time constraints where the alleged perpetrator is in custody), as much of the following information should be obtained about the witness as is possible:

- > age;
- > gender;
- > sexuality (where the alleged offence might contain a homophobic element);
- > preferred name/mode of address;
- > any physical and/or learning disabilities or mental health issues (see Chapter 3 if this is suspected);
- > domestic circumstances (including whether the witness is currently in a 'safe' environment);
- > relationship of the witness to the alleged perpetrator;
- > any medication being taken and its potential impact on the interview;
- > current emotional state (including trauma, distress, shock, depression, fears of intimidation/recrimination, and recent significant stressful events experienced);
- > likely impact of recalling of traumatic events on the behaviour of the witness;

- > current or previous contact with public services (including previous contact with police, the local children's or adult services authority or health professionals); and
- > any other relevant information or intelligence known.

Race and cultural factors

4.32 The witness's race, gender, culture, ethnicity and first language should be given due consideration by the interviewing team. They have a responsibility to be informed about and take into account the needs and expectations of witnesses from the specific minority groups in their local area. The interviewing team's knowledge of the witness's religion, culture, customs and beliefs may have a bearing on their understanding of any account given by the witness, including the language and allusions the witness may make to, for example, reward and punishment.

4.33 The investigating team needs to bear in mind that some witnesses may have experienced discrimination and/or oppression through their contact with government agencies and local authorities. Their experiences of racism, for example, may result in them distrusting the professionals involved in an investigative interview. Asylum-seeking witnesses and refugees may have a fear of disclosing abuse because of what may happen to them and their family.

4.34 It is also important that the investigating team considers the complexities of multiple discrimination, e.g. as might be the case with a homosexual witness from a minority ethnic community, and of individuals' experiences of discrimination. The specific needs and experiences of dual-heritage witnesses must also be taken into account.

4.35 Some possible relevant considerations include the following – although this list is in no way intended to be exhaustive:

- > customs or beliefs that could hinder the witness from participating in an interview on certain days (e.g. holy days), or may otherwise affect the witness's participation (e.g. when fasting);
- > the relationship to authority figures within different minority ethnic groups. For example, witnesses from some cultures may be expected to show respect to authority figures by not referring to them by their first names, and by not correcting or contradicting them;
- > the manner in which love and affection are demonstrated; and
- > issues of shame. For example, witnesses from some cultures may be inhibited from talking about a sexual assault for fear of shaming their family.

4.36 A witness should be interviewed in the language of their choice. If a witness is bilingual, then this may require the use of an interpreter. The interpreter should be from the National Register of Interpreters (see paragraph 4.67).

Information about the alleged offence(s)

4.37 It is preferable (though not always necessary or essential) that interviewers know little detail of the alleged offence(s) for the purposes of the interview. However, in order to plan and prepare for the interview, interviewers will need a little general knowledge about:

- > the type of alleged offence(s);
- > the approximate time and location of the alleged offence(s);
- > the scene of the alleged offence(s) (note: this should only be enough general knowledge to help the interviewer understand what might be said during the interview);
- > how the alleged offence came to the notice of police; and
- > the nature of any intimidation.

4.38 Where the interviewer is also the investigating officer or has been interviewing other witnesses during the course of an investigation, it is accepted that circumstances and practical resource considerations might be such that they are likely to know more about the alleged offence(s) than is set out above. In this situation, interviewers should try to avoid contaminating the interview process with such knowledge as far as possible.

Information important to the investigation

4.39 While obtaining an account of the alleged event is essential, other matters might need to be covered during the interview in order to progress the investigation. These matters can be regarded as 'information important to the investigation'. Obtaining a complete picture of all the relevant issues within an interview is essential because it will provide the investigating officer with the information necessary to conduct a comprehensive investigation. It could also prove beneficial in discussions with the CPS if the subject of witness assessment is raised. Information important to the investigation falls into two categories: general investigative practice (see paragraph 4.41) and case-specific material (see paragraphs 4.42 to 4.48). Where such information important to the investigation has not already been covered as part of the witness's account, interviewers should consider introducing it either in the latter part of the questioning phase (see paragraphs 4.150 to 4.188) or in a subsequent interview session, depending on the complexity of the case and what is alleged to have been witnessed by the interviewee.

4.40 The amount of knowledge that interviewers have about information important to the investigation prior to the interview depends on what they know about what is alleged to have been witnessed by the interviewee. As noted in paragraph 4.37, it is preferable that interviewers know little detail of the alleged offence(s) before the interview. Only a little knowledge that could form the basis of potential questions about information important to the investigation is, therefore, likely to be available to the interviewer at this point in time. However, while planning the interview, interviewers should apply what they know of the alleged offences to determine the areas of general investigative practice that might need to be covered in the interview. More case-specific material could either be made available to the interviewer (from the investigating officer, interview monitor or recording equipment operator) after an attempt has been made to elicit and clarify the witness's account, or be included in the planning information for a later interview to avoid potential contamination of the process.

Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice

4.41 Information important to the investigation relating to general investigative practice includes:

- > points to prove any offence(s) alleged;
- > information that should be considered when assessing a witness's identification evidence, as suggested in R v Turnbull and Camelo ([1976] 63 Cr App R 132) and embodied in the mnemonic ADVOKATE (Practical Guide to Investigative Interviewing (National Centre for Policing Excellence, most recent edition 2004)):
 - A Amount of time under observation
 - D Distance from the eyewitness to the person/incident
 - V Visibility – including time of day, street lighting, etc.
 - O Obstructions – anything getting in the way of the witness's view
 - K Known or seen before – did the witness know, or had they seen, the alleged perpetrator before?
 - A Any reason to remember – was there something specific that made the person/incident memorable?
 - T Time lapse – how long since the witness last saw the alleged perpetrator?
 - E Errors or material discrepancies;
- > anything said by the witness to a third party after the incident (evidence of first complaint etc.); and
- > any other witnesses present.

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of the information important to the investigation pertaining to general investigative practice varies according to the circumstances of the case.

Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material

4.42 Information important to the investigation relating to case-specific material includes:

- > how and where any items used in the commission of the offence (e.g. clothing, vehicles, weapons, cash, documents, other property) were disposed of, if the witness might have some knowledge of this;

- > any background information relevant to the witness's account (e.g. matters that might enhance or detract from the credibility of the witness's evidence, such as the amount of any alcohol consumed);
- > any lifestyle information relevant to the witness's account;
- > where the witness has knowledge of an alleged victim or a suspected perpetrator, an exploration of their relationship, background history, places frequented and any events related or similar to the matter under investigation; and
- > any risk assessment issues that the witness might know about that concern the likely conduct of the alleged perpetrator, their family or associates (this should be dealt with after the witness's account has been covered to avoid confusion).

This is not intended to be an exhaustive list. The nature of any case-specific material varies according to the circumstances of the alleged offence, the nature of any relationship between the witness and the alleged perpetrator, and what is alleged to have been seen, heard or otherwise experienced.

4.43 Significant evidential inconsistencies and significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information) are discrete categories of case-specific material.

Significant evidential inconsistencies

4.44 During the course of an investigation, it may be necessary to ask a witness to explain a significant evidential inconsistency between what they have said during the interview and other material gathered during the course of the investigation. Such inconsistencies would, for example, include significant differences between the account provided by the witness during the interview and:

- > what the witness is reported to have said on a previous occasion;
- > the accounts of other witnesses; and
- > injuries sustained either by the alleged victim or the alleged offender.

4.45 There are a number of reasons for significant evidential inconsistencies between what a witness says during an interview and other material gathered during the course of an investigation. Many of these reasons are perfectly innocent in their nature (e.g. genuine mistakes by the witness or others stemming from a memory-encoding or recall failure, or sub-conscious contamination of their memory by external influences), but occasions may arise where the witness is motivated either to fabricate or exaggerate their account of an event.

4.46 Whatever the reason for the significant evidential inconsistency, occasions may arise where it is necessary to ask the witness to explain it. The following principles should be taken into account when considering whether, when and how to solicit such an explanation:

- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought where the inconsistency is a significant one.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after careful consideration has concluded that there is no obvious explanation for them.
- > Explanations for evidential inconsistencies should only be sought after the witness's account has been fully explored, either at the end of the interview or in a further interview, as appropriate.
- > Interviewers should always be aware that the purpose of asking a witness to explain an evidential inconsistency is to pursue the truth in respect of the matter under investigation; it is not to put pressure on a witness to alter their account.
- > Explanations for an evidential inconsistency should take account of the extent to which the witness may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence.
- > Questions intended to elicit an explanation for an evidential inconsistency should be carefully planned, phrased tactfully and presented in a non-confrontational manner.

Significant evidential omissions (case-relevant information)

4.47 During the course of an investigation, it may be necessary to ask a witness about relevant information that they have not mentioned in their account. This may arise, for example, where others say that the alleged offender was carrying an object, or that the alleged offender's behaviour was unusual or that there was something particular about the alleged offender's description or vehicle, but this is not mentioned by the witness. There are a number of reasons why this type of information can be omitted from an account, and situations may arise where it is important to seek an explanation from the witness. In these circumstances it may be necessary to ask a question to establish if the witness has knowledge of the information. Such a question should only be asked after the witness's account has been fully explored, at the end of the interview (or in a further interview if necessary).

4.48 When planning such a question, the interviewer should consider:

- > whether the information omitted by the witness is likely to be important enough to be worthy of explanation;
- > the extent to which the witness may be vulnerable to suggestion, compliance or acquiescence; and

- > which type of question is most likely to elicit the information in a manner that will not have an adverse effect on the value of any answer.

A plan for soliciting an explanation for the omission of case-relevant information from a witness's account must consider the reliability of any answer. For example, a useful starting point might be to ask the witness a specific-closed question such as 'What else can you tell me about the incident?' If the witness's answer:

- > includes the case-relevant information but lacks sufficient detail, the interviewer should ask the witness to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'). When the case-relevant information has been covered, the witness should be tactfully asked to explain its omission from their account, unless the reason for its omission is apparent from the witness's response or the circumstances of the case; or
- > does not include the case relevant information, a further decision will need to be made as to whether it is necessary to ask a question that might be regarded as leading (e.g. 'Do you recall seeing/hearing...?'). It should be noted that if the answer to such a leading question contains the case-relevant information, it is likely to be of limited evidential value. The evidential value of such an answer may, however, be enhanced if the interviewer then asks the witness to provide a more detailed response by means of an open question (e.g. 'Tell me about...'), followed by questions intended tactfully to elicit an explanation for its omission from their account (unless the reason for the omission is apparent from the witness's response or the circumstances of the case).

Where the witness cannot recall the case-relevant information, this may be due to not attending to the information or to memory loss. Further reading on case-relevant information can be found in The Evaluation of the Investigation and Legal Process Involving Child Abuse Offences to Establish a Model of Investigation for Investigators by K.B. Marlow (unpublished MSc thesis, Portsmouth, 2002).

Use of planning information

4.49 The planning information should then be used to:

- > set aims and objectives for the interview;
- > determine the techniques used within the phased interview; and
- > decide:
 - the means by which the interview is to be recorded;
 - who should conduct the interview and if anybody else should be present (including social support for the interviewee);

- if anybody should monitor the interview (e.g. investigating officer, supervising officer, specialist/interview adviser, etc.) and who will operate the equipment;
 - the location of the interview;
 - the timing of the interview;
 - the duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session); and
 - what is likely to happen after the interview.
- > increase the amount of information reported by the witness being recorded;
 - > safeguard the integrity of the interviewer and the interview process; and
 - > increase the opportunities for monitoring and for the development of interview skills.

Aims and objectives

4.50 Setting clear aims and objectives is important because they give direction to the interview and contribute to its structure. The interview aims and objectives should focus on trying to establish what happened prior to, during and after the alleged event(s), including the details of all the physical and verbal interactions that took place between the witness and the alleged perpetrator(s) and between the witness and anybody else. The interview aims and objectives should also take account of any suspected attempt to stop the witness from talking to the police or any other agency or person.

Techniques

4.51 The kind of techniques used within the phased structure set out in Part 4B will vary according to what is known about the witness and the offence when planning the interview, as well as how the witness behaves and what emerges during the interview itself. For example, it is likely to be productive to make use of some of the cognitive mnemonics referred to in paragraph 4.104 within the phased interview approach with an eyewitness who is able and willing to participate in the process, whereas such techniques are unlikely to be productive while a witness remains hostile and less co-operative and where a more managed communication is necessary.

How the interview is to be recorded

4.52 To make an application for the record of an interview with an intimidated or Section 137 CJA 2003 witness to be played as evidence-in-chief, the interview must be visually recorded. In the event of such a witness being reluctant to have their interview visually recorded, the possibility of an application being made to the court for the recording to be edited in such a way as to minimise the identification of the witness (for example, by pixilation of the witness's face and by adjusting the tone of the witness's voice) should be considered. Where this possibility is discussed, it should be made clear to the witness that such anonymity cannot be guaranteed but that it is rather a matter to be determined by the court.

4.53 Interviews with significant witnesses should usually be visually recorded because this is likely to:

- > increase the amount and quality of information gained from the witness;

4.54 Where a significant witness withholds consent for the interview to be visually recorded, consideration should be given to making an audio-record of it. Where a witness withholds consent for the interview to be audio-recorded, a written record in the form of notes should be made of it. In any event, a Criminal Justice Act statement should subsequently be compiled from the visual/audio-recording or notes. The statement should then be adduced as evidence and the visual/audio-recording or notes revealed to the CPS.

4.55 Where an interview with a significant witness has been recorded by means of visual or audio-recording equipment, consistency between what was said by the witness during the interview and what is recorded on the witness's Criminal Justice Act statement is likely to be greater if the visual or audio record is reviewed prior to the statement being drafted. This is particularly true of complex or lengthy interviews where witnesses and interviewers alike could suffer from the effects of fatigue. In most circumstances, unless there is some doubt about the subsequent availability of the witness, it will be appropriate for there to be a break between the interview and the witness reviewing and signing their Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement. In complex cases, it might be advantageous for the statement to be checked independently against the recording prior to the witness being invited to review and sign it. A further visual/audio-recording should be made of the statement being reviewed and signed unless the circumstances are such that it is impractical to do so; this recording should also be revealed to the CPS.

4.56 Regardless of how the interview is recorded, notes should always be taken that are sufficiently detailed to assist the investigating officer to determine any further lines of enquiry that might be necessary and to brief the custody officer and any other interviewers where a suspected perpetrator is in custody. Responsibility for the compilation of such notes should be agreed during the planning phase of the interview. This responsibility should fall to the interview monitor, where they are in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment, or the recording equipment operator. While interviewers should consider taking brief notes to assist them during the free narrative phase of the interview where this is appropriate (see paragraph 4.123), they should not be responsible for taking notes for the purposes of briefing others because this is likely to distract the witness, obstruct the flow of recall and slow the interview process down, thus hindering the maximum retrieval of information.

Interviewers and others present at the interview

The interviewer

4.57 Consideration should be given to who is best qualified to lead the interview. A special blend of skills is required to take the lead in video-recorded interviews. The lead interviewer should be a person who has established or is likely to be able to establish rapport with the witness, who understands how to communicate effectively with interviewees who might become distressed, and who has a proper grasp of the rules of evidence and criminal offences. The lead interviewer must have good knowledge of information important to the investigation (see paragraphs 4.39 to 4.48), including the points needed to prove particular offences.

4.58 In addition to taking account of the prospective interviewer's skills, the following factors should be taken into consideration when considering who should conduct the interview:

- > the experience of the prospective interviewer in talking to witnesses in respect of the type of offence under investigation, and any other skills that they possess that could be useful;
- > any personal or domestic issues that the prospective interviewer has that might have an adverse impact on the interview; and
- > whether any previous experience that the prospective interviewer has with the witness is likely to either inhibit rapport building or give rise to challenges of coaching, prompting or offering inducements.

4.59 The witness's gender, race, culture and ethnicity must always be given due consideration, and advice sought where necessary, but stereotypic conclusions about who is to conduct the interview should be avoided.

4.60 Where the witness expresses a particular preference for an interviewer of either gender or sexual orientation or from a particular race, cultural or ethnic background, this should be accommodated as far as is practical in the circumstances.

4.61 The interviewer should consider the appropriate mode of dress for the particular interviewee. For example, research shows that a person's perceived authority can have an adverse effect on the interviewee, especially with respect to suggestibility.

4.62 Exceptionally, it may be in the interests of the witness to be interviewed by an adult in whom they have already put confidence but who is not a member of the investigating team. Provided that such a person has appropriate professional qualifications, is independent and impartial, is not a party to the proceedings, is prepared to co-operate with appropriately trained interviewers and can accept adequate briefing (including permitted questioning techniques), this possibility should not be precluded.

The interview monitor

4.63 The presence of an interview monitor is desirable because they can help to ensure that the interview is conducted in a professional manner, can assist in identifying any gaps in the witness's account that emerge, and can ensure that the witness's needs are kept paramount. Careful consideration needs to be made with regard to whether the interview monitor is present in the interviewing room itself (in the event of which they might effectively be regarded as being a 'second interviewer'), or in the adjoining room with the monitoring equipment (in which case they might effectively be regarded as being an 'observer'). The possibility that the witness might feel intimidated by the presence of too many people in the interview room should be taken into account in determining where an interview monitor is situated, particularly when an interview supporter and interpreter are also to be present in the interview room.

4.64 Regardless of who takes the lead, the interviewing team should have a clear and shared remit for the role of the interview monitor. Too often this role is subjugated to the need for someone to operate the video equipment when, in reality, the interview monitor has a vital role in observing the lead interviewer's questioning and the witness's demeanour. The interview monitor should be alert to interviewer errors and apparent confusions in the communication between the lead interviewer and the witness. The interview monitor can reflect back to the planning discussions and communicate with the lead interviewer as necessary. Such observation and monitoring can be essential to the overall clarity and completeness of the video-recorded account, which will be especially important in court.

Equipment operators

4.65 The equipment should always have an operator for the duration of the interview. This will allow the view recorded by the camera to be adjusted if the witness moves. It should also provide an opportunity for the interviewer to be alerted at the earliest possible moment in the event of an equipment failure, rather than such a failure only being discovered at the end of the interview (see also Appendix H).

Interpreters

4.66 Witnesses should always be interviewed in the language of their choice, unless exceptional circumstances prevail (for example, in respect of the availability of interpreters). This will normally be the witness's first language, unless specific circumstances result in their second language being more appropriate. Interviewers should be aware that some witnesses could be perfectly fluent in English, but might use their first language to express intimate or more complex concepts. As a result, the possibility of using an interpreter should be considered while planning the interview, even where a witness is bilingual.

4.67 Interpreters should be appropriately accredited and trained so that they understand the need to avoid altering the meaning of questions and replies. They should normally be selected from the National Register of Public Service Interpreters or the Council for the Advancement of Communication with Deaf People (CACDP) National Directory of Sign Language Interpreters. If it is not possible to select an interpreter from these registers then the interpreter may be chosen from some other list, providing the interpreter meets standards at least equal to those required for entry onto the National or CACDP Registers, in terms of academic qualifications and proven experience of interpreting within the criminal justice system. All interpreters need to be independent, impartial and unbiased. Family members or other close relatives should not be used either during the interview or when preparing the witness for it.

4.68 Interpreters should be involved in the planning process. They should have a clear understanding of the objectives of the interview, its structure and the function served by any specific techniques used (e.g. those of the cognitive interview). It should be remembered that some words in English might not have an exact equivalent in other languages and communication systems. This possibility should, therefore, be discussed while planning the interview with a view to developing strategies to address what might otherwise be a problem.

4.69 If interviewers are working with an interpreter, it is important to have clarified at the outset who will lead the interview in terms of maintaining direct communication with the witness. If the witness is communicating via an interpreter, the lead interviewer should identify themselves as such while maintaining appropriate eye contact with the witness, so that the witness understands that they should address the interviewer, not the interpreter. If, however, a signer is being used to communicate with a witness who has a hearing impairment, it may be more important for the signer to maintain the direct communication with the witness.

4.70 Where an interpreter is present, they must be clearly identified at the beginning of the interview. Whenever possible, they should also be visible in one of the shots recorded.

4.71 Where a signer is being used to interpret for a witness with a hearing impairment, a camera should be used to record the signer's hand movements as well as those of the witness. In some interview suites, it might be necessary to make use of a portable camera, in addition to the static equipment already set up in the suite, for this purpose.

Interview supporters

4.72 It may be helpful for a support person who is known to the witness to be present during the interview to provide emotional support (the 'interview supporter'). Where this is appropriate and practical, the views of the witness should be established prior to the interview as to whether they wish another person to be present and, if so, who this should be.

4.73 Other witnesses in the case, including those giving evidence of an early complaint, cannot act as interview supporters.

4.74 If an interpreter is included, then they will need to be distinct from the supporter; these different functions should not be vested in one person.

4.75 Supporters must be clearly told that their role is limited to providing emotional support and that they must not prompt or speak for the witness, especially on any matters relevant to the investigation.

4.76 Where an interview supporter is present, they must be clearly identified at the beginning of the interview. Whenever possible, they should also be visible in one of the angles recorded. Best practice would be for the supporter to make sure they are outside the witness's line of vision, for example by sitting on the opposite side of the witness to the interviewer.

Location of the interview

4.77 Active consideration should be given to the location of the interview and the layout of the room in which it is to take place. In the planning phase, the interviewer should attempt to determine where the witness would prefer to be interviewed. Some witnesses may be happy to be interviewed in an interview suite, while others might prefer to be interviewed in a setting familiar and comfortable to them. Whatever the decision, the location should be quiet enough to avoid a situation in which background noise is likely to interfere with the quality of the sound on any visual or audio record, and free from interruptions, distractions, and fear and intimidation, so the interviewer and interviewee can concentrate fully on the task in hand – the interview.

4.78 Interviewers should ensure that sufficient pens and paper are available for use where a witness's recall could be assisted by drawing a sketch/plan.

4.79 In the event of a witness being interviewed at their home address, care should be taken to avoid saying anything or visually recording any background material that might lead to the location being identified (the use of background screens should be considered if necessary).

Timing of the interview

4.80 The decision on when to conduct an interview needs to take account of the demands of the investigation (e.g. a suspected perpetrator being in custody) as well as the potential effects of trauma and/or stress. Trauma and stress can interfere with the process of remembering, but this should be determined by asking the interviewee rather than by the application of an arbitrary period of time. Some interviewees will want to be interviewed relatively quickly, while others might wish to be interviewed at a later date. It should always be borne in mind that the potential for memory contamination taking place increases with the delay.

4.81 Interviews should not take place at a time when the witness is likely to be suffering from the effects of fatigue (other than in the exceptional circumstances mentioned in paragraph 4.82). The effect on the witness's routine and the potential impact of any medication, as well as their views, must be taken into account in determining the best time to conduct the interview.

4.82 In the event of circumstances being such that it is absolutely essential for a witness to be interviewed at a time when they are likely to be suffering the effects of fatigue (for example, where an alleged offender is in police custody for a serious offence and an interview is necessary to secure potentially vital evidence), consideration may be given to conducting a brief interview in the first instance which sets out the witness's account and addresses any issues on which immediate action needs to be taken. Where it is necessary to conduct a brief interview, the principles set out in paragraph 4.16 should be adhered to. A more substantial interview can then be arranged at an appropriate time.

Duration of the interview (including pace, breaks and the possibility of more than one session)

4.83 The interview should go at the pace of the witness. Some witnesses will require regular comfort breaks (for example, elderly and frail witnesses). Whenever possible, the interviewer should seek advice from people who know the witness about the likely length of time that the witness can be interviewed before a pause or break is offered while planning the interview.

4.84 Some witnesses who have experienced a traumatic event may find that the interview is 'too much' for them, especially if emotional matters are being discussed. Ways of assisting these witnesses may include planning for breaks in the interview and/or pauses in which the interviewer moves the conversation on to more neutral topics such as those mentioned in the rapport phase (see paragraphs 4.113 to 4.120) before returning to the matter under investigation.

4.85 In some circumstances it might be necessary to conduct the interview over more than one session (for example: in complicated cases; where allegations of multiple offences are involved; where the witness is elderly and frail; or where the witness is taking medication likely to make them sleepy). These sessions might be separated by a matter of hours or, if necessary, could take place over a number of days. When this occurs, care must be taken to avoid repetition of the same focused questions over time, which could lead to unreliable or inconsistent responding in some witnesses and interviews being ruled inadmissible by the court.

Planning for immediately after the interview

4.86 Although interviewers cannot predict the course of an interview, planning discussions should cover the different possible outcomes and consider the implications for the witness. This should include the possibility of a medical examination (where this has not taken place before the interview), the possible need for alternative accommodation and any other steps necessary to protect the witness or reduce the possibility of harassment.

Witnesses who might become suspects

4.87 So far as is practicable, consideration should be given in the planning stage as to how interviewers will deal with any confessions to criminal offences made by the witness in the course of the interview. Any decision on an appropriate course of action will involve taking into account the seriousness of the crime admitted and weighing it against the seriousness of the crime under investigation.

4.88 It is preferable to anticipate and plan for such an eventuality, while recognising that any decisions on a particular course of action are likely to depend upon what has been disclosed by the witness during the course of the interview (see paragraphs 4.214 to 4.218 for guidance in respect of incriminating statements made by witnesses during interviews).

Recording the planning process

4.89 A full written record should be kept of the decisions made during the planning process and of the information and rationale underpinning them. This record should be referred to in the body of the Criminal Justice Act 1967 statement subsequently made by the interviewer in relation to the planning, preparation and conduct of the interview, and should be revealed to the CPS under the requirements of the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996.

Preparing the witness for an interview

4.90 Witnesses should always be prepared for an interview. In some cases, this might be fairly brief and take place immediately prior to the interview, while in other instances it might be necessary to take more time and/or for it to take place several hours or days before the interview.

4.91 The preparation of the witness should include an explanation of the purpose of the interview and the reason for visually recording it (including who might subsequently view it), the role of the interviewer(s) and anybody else to be present, the location of the interview and roughly how long it is likely to take. The interviewer(s) should also outline the general structure of the interview and provide some explanation of the ground rules that apply to it

(including the witness not making any assumptions about the interviewer's knowledge of the event). Substantive issues relating to the evidence should not be discussed while preparing a witness for an interview.

4.92 Any issues or concerns raised by the witness should be addressed while preparing them for the interview (for example, welfare issues or concerns about the possibility of a later court appearance).

4.93 Witnesses who are intimidated, reluctant or hostile might need to spend more time getting to know the interviewer before they are ready and/or willing to take part in an investigative interview. Interviewers should consider whether one (or more) meetings with a witness should take place prior to the interview, because this familiarisation process may take some time.

4.94 Assistance should be sought if necessary from interview supervisors and interview advisers (see tiers 4 and 5 of ACPO's Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)) with the issues that might arise during the preparation of a witness for an interview.

4.95 Full written notes must be kept of the preparation of a witness for an interview and revealed to the CPS.

4.96 The plan for the interview should be reviewed and revised if necessary in the light of any additional information that arises from preparing the witness for the interview.

Victim Personal Statements

4.97 Interviewers should plan to give witnesses who are victims the opportunity to make a Victim Personal Statement (VPS) at the end of the interview. The purpose of a VPS is to give a victim of crime the chance to say what effect the crime has had on them and to help identify their need for information and support. The statement should be taken in the same format as the witness statement – e.g. where a visually-recorded interview has taken place, the VPS should also be visually-recorded. For further details of the scheme see Home Office guidance issued on 14 August 2001 under cover of Home Office Circular No. 35/2001 Guidance on the Victim Personal Statement Scheme (Home Office, 2001).

4.98 Providing a VPS (visually-recorded or written) is entirely voluntary. Witnesses should be provided with an explanation about what a VPS is and how it can/cannot be used, to help them to make an informed choice as to whether to provide a VPS or not.

4.99 In cases where the witness statement has been taken in the form of a visually-recorded interview, it is preferable for the VPS to follow on the same recording, but there must be a clear break between the two. This can be achieved by dividing the two statements with a still image, e.g. the police force logo. Alternatively or additionally, the interviewer may make a statement on the recording acknowledging the change from the evidential interview to the VPS.

4.100 There is always the possibility that at a later time the victim or their carer may feel that the impact of the experience has been such that a second statement is needed. Unless there are exceptional circumstances, a second statement should be taken in a written format according to the Home Office guidance on VPSs.

Part 4B: Interviewing intimidated witnesses, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses, including ‘reluctant’ and ‘hostile’ witnesses

Aims

By the end of Part 4B, those involved in conducting interviews with intimidated witnesses, Section 137 Criminal Justice Act (CJA) 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses should be able to understand, with respect to each individual case:

- > establishing rapport, including the importance of ground rules (paragraphs 4.107 to 4.130);
- > how to elicit and support a free narrative account (paragraphs 4.131 to 4.149);
- > styles of questioning (paragraphs 4.150 to 4.188);
- > closing the interview (paragraphs 4.189 to 4.198);
- > evaluating the interview (paragraphs 4.199 to 4.201);
- > further interviews (paragraph 4.204); and
- > safeguarding intimidated witnesses (paragraphs 4.207 to 4.213).

General advice on interviewing intimidated witnesses, Section 137 CJA 2003 witnesses and significant witnesses

4.101 Over the years, many professionals have recommended the use of the phased approach of interviewing, starting with a free narrative phase and then gradually becoming more and more specific in the nature of the questioning in order to elicit further detail. This structure results in what is termed a ‘hierarchy of reliability’ of information, with the opening phases resulting in good quality recall, but as the interview becomes more specific the quality of information elicited may reduce. Research has shown that the free narrative phase of the interview typically is incomplete but more accurate. When interviewees are questioned about a ‘to-be-remembered’ event, more information is elicited but the accuracy tends to be lower, with the more direct questions resulting in higher error. Thus interviewers have to be particularly careful about the types of questions used and where in the interview to use particular questions (see paragraphs 4.153 to 4.188).

4.102 However, inclusion of a phased approach in this guidance should not be taken to imply that all other techniques are necessarily unacceptable or to preclude their development. Neither should what follows be regarded as a checklist to be rigidly worked through. Flexibility is the key to successful interviewing. Nevertheless, the sound legal framework it provides should not be departed from by interviewers unless they have discussed and agreed the reasons for doing so with their senior manager(s) or an interview adviser (tier 5 of the Association of Chief Police Officers’ (ACPO’s) Investigative Interviewing Strategy (ACPO, 2004)).

4.103 For all witnesses, interviews should normally consist of the following four main phases:

- > establish rapport;
- > seek free narrative recall;
- > ask questions; and
- > closure.

Each phase will be described in greater detail below. These phases are compatible with and underpin the PEACE interview framework advocated by ACPO.

4.104 The phased approach is at the heart of the cognitive interview (CI)/enhanced cognitive interview (ECI). Essentially, if all the cognitive ‘special’ instructions are taken away and not used, what is left is the phased interview. The CI was initially developed in an attempt to improve witness memory performance by using various techniques derived from cognitive psychology to gain as much correct information as possible without jeopardising the quality of the information reported. The original CI comprised a set of four instructions given by the interviewer to the interviewee: (i) report everything; (ii) mentally reinstate context; (iii) recall events in a variety of different temporal orders; and (iv) change perspective. Subsequently, the originators found that real-life police interviewing of witnesses lacked much that the psychology of interpersonal communication deemed important. They therefore developed the ECI, which incorporated several new principles from memory research and the social psychology of communication. The ECI therefore consists of the original CI techniques noted above plus some additional techniques (e.g. transfer of control and witness-compatible questioning).

4.105 Thus the following discussion will also describe the ‘special’ cognitive mnemonics that aim to help elicit specific details that witnesses may have difficulty remembering. Some interviewers think that use of the ECI is an all-or-nothing affair – that they have to use all the techniques or none at all. Instead it would be preferable to use one technique well rather than all of its techniques poorly. As noted above, if you take away all the ‘special’ techniques of the ECI you are left with the phased interview. So rather than it being a

